Area Wool Pool Set For June 20

A Wool Pool for this area will be held on June 20-21 at Sermon's Warehouse in Washington, N. C.

N. C. In the past years many farmers in Perquimans County have participated in this Wool Pool and have made money by marketing their wool in this way.

The sheep should be shorn while they are dry and the wool rolled and tied and kept in a dry condition. The better the wool is handled while being sheared, probably the higher grade it will have when it is sold. The prices for the wool this year are as follows: Clear wool, 57.02; stained wool, 55.02; short wool, 54.02; coarse wool, 52.02; reject wool, 50.02; light burry wool, 52.02; medium burry wool, 46.02; heavy burry wool, 42.02; lamb's wool, 44.02; tags, 12.00.

There will be a slight handling charge for wool sold in the Wool Pool. Those that have followed the prices of wool for the past few years will note that the price of wool is up this year compared to the past few years.

If you are planning to participate in this Wool Pool leave your name and address by the County Agricultural Agent's office in Hertford before the day of the Wool Pool.

Each class member present also gave a brief summary of his activities during the past 30 years. An accounting following this revealed that the original 20 have now grown to be 50. This number includes 26 children and five grandchildren.

Boating In State Now Big Business

Boating in North Carolina—already big business even by modern-day standards—is getting bigger every year. Sales of pleasure craft have increased steadily since the end of World War II and now North Carolina counts some 50,000 outboard motorboats alone on its lakes and streams. South Carolina is not far behind with 40,000 such craft on fresh water.

The pleasure boat boom shows no signs of leveling out. As more and more families take to the water, loaded down with fishing gear, picnic baskets, sun-tan lotion, and dark glasses, sales of motors, trailers and other assorted equipment keep cash registers jingling all over the state. It is nothing for a family to drive 50, maybe even 100 miles, to take their boat trailer to a lake for an afternoon of fishing or perhaps just "boat riding."

The post-war recreation trend is not confined to North Carolina. It is national. In 1959 the public spent approximately two and a half billion dollars on boating—pleasure boating, which included sales of 540,000 outboard motors, some 500,000 boats, and 175 boat trailers. Just where North Carolina fits into this sales picture is anybody's guess, for it did not require boat registrations until January 1 of this year.

The recently organized Carolina Boating Association reports that the state has one boat for every 12 families, somewhat below the national average, but that sales are increasing by about 10 per cent each year. Banks and finance companies have found boating a prime field for installment financing and now any good credit risk can buy a boat just as he buys an automobile.
