

SENATOR Sam Ervin SAYS

Washington — As this year passes into history, some review of the events which dominated Congress seems in order. The year began with the chief issue being whether Congress would enact tax reduction legislation, and as the year went along civil rights legislation achieved prominence as the co-equal issue. The fact that both of these issues are still pending as bills before the Congress demonstrates the difficulty of the questions presented by them.

Government had other problems. Farm legislation was predicted to be difficult to enact, and it proved to be. The principal actions in this area came with the enactment of the Feed Grains Law, and House passage of the Cotton Bill. Foreign aid came under heavy Congressional fire as firm support for improvement on this program came from the Clay Committee's recommendations to the President. Personally, the vote on the ratification of the nuclear test ban treaty proved to be the most difficult decision which has confronted me during my service in Congress.

There was tragedy, too, as a stunned Senate recessed to await the news from Dallas on November 22. In the twinkling of an eye, John F. Kennedy, a former colleague in the Senate, was dead. On the day of Senate Tributes to his memory, I was impressed by the words of his brother, Senator Edward Kennedy, who expressed the feeling of the Senate and the country when he said:

"The Senate, for him, as it is for me, is the symbol of how Americans can resolve their differences through reason, instead of violence."

Reason, scholarship, and ideals were trademarks of the late President. I remember him also as a strong, brave young man—one who carried to his grave injuries received during World War II and endured through the years, one who offered his life for his country, first in war and again in peace. The first offer was refused. Ironically, the second was accepted. I remember him for his gallant personal victory over physical disability, and remember the standing ovation he received from his colleagues when he returned to the Senate floor on crutches in 1955. I remember his vitality, his wit, and his fine mind.

As a public servant, I remember him as a sophisticated, polished statesman who could nevertheless communicate and identify with people of every station. He was a man of rare eloquence, strong conviction, and great courage. I remember him not only as a political leader who met with the great issues of the age, but also as one who rekindled interest in the arts, renewed concern for our national heritage, and increased respect for scholarship.

Perhaps our greatest legacy was his dream. As we reflect upon the old year, it has a special meaning. Once he stated it thusly: "I believe in an America that is on the march — an America respected by all nations, friends and foes alike — an America that is moving, choosing, doing, dreaming — a strong America in a world of peace."

Hearts may be attracted by assumed qualities, but the affections are not to be fixed but by those that are real. —Charles Alexander de Moy.

presents, the amount given being approximately $2,000. No official of the company or any member of the board of directors shares in this special Christmas gift. It is given only to the superintendents and to the skilled and unskilled laborers. The plant, which employs about 180 men, will be closed down for a week, when the customary repairs necessary at this season of the year will be made.

His O. Miss: Howard Pitt, Jr., solved the problem of Christmas shopping under difficulties and at the same time made practical application of some of the advice he has been getting about the blessedness of giving, especially at Christmas. Incidentally, Howard, who is five, has often seen members of his family drop coins into the Salvation Army pot on a street corner in Norfolk, and he has at times dropped in a nickel or a dime himself. The money was, of course, given to him for the purpose. The youngster went with his mother, his grandmother and others of the family to Norfolk on a shopping trip on Monday. The stores were crowded and it wasn't very pleasant to shop. Howard had a dollar, all his own, with which he was to buy his Christmas presents. The party shopped around for some time, buying this and that as they had opportunity, but the crowd grew denser and it became increasingly unpleasant to elbow one's way through the throngs of foiks pushing their way through the aisles. Somehow the party did get around, however, and finally Mrs. Pitt bought herself of Howard's shopping plans. "Where is your money, son?" she asked. It had, a little time before, she knew, been clutched in a tight fist, for Howard thought a lot of his money. But at the question Howard held up both hands, empty. "I gave it to the woman with the pot and the bell," he said. "Them stores were so crowded," he explained, "I couldn't buy anything, anyhow."
