Hog Cholera Vaccines May Be Banned Dec.

Agriculture Commissioner James A. ("Jim") Graham today gave notice to veterinarians and swine producers that the sale and use of hog cholera vaccines will probably be banned in the State after December 31, 1968.

Graham said resolutions at recent regional hog cholera eradication conferences urged the U.S. Department of Agriculture to make illegal the interstate shipment of the vaccines as of the end of this year, and it is considered very likely that such action will be taken by the federal agency.

"If USDA adopts this regulation, it will eventually exhaust the supply of vaccines in North Carolina, since none are manufactured in the State," he said.

"However, the North Carolina Hog Cholera Advisory Committee agreed in a meeting on July 1 that the federal regulation is adopted. Otherwise, varying amounts of vaccines will be in the hands of private veterinarians and buyers of pigs will have no way of knowing whether or not the swine have been vaccinated.

"Inasmuch as some states will not accept vaccinated swine, it is important that buyers and shippers know what they are getting. Also, a cut-off date notice is important so that veterinarians and distributors will not find themselves with a considerable investment in stocks of vaccines they cannot legally use."

Dr. T. F. Zweigart, head of the N.C. Department of Agriculture Veterinary Division is currently notifying veterinarians of the probable discontinuance of the vaccines.

"Under the proposed federal regulation, swine vaccinated after December 31, 1968, would be eligible to move interstate through June 30, 1969, provided requirements of states of destination were met," the letter states. "After June 30, 1969, all swine vaccinated during the period mentioned could move interstate only for immediate slaughter." Dr. Zweigart's notice stated, "Contingent upon the approval of the proposed federal regulation, it will not be legal to sell or administer modified live virus hog cholera vaccines in North Carolina after December 31, 1968. The use of anti-hog cholera serum or antibody concentrate will not be affected by this change."

The State's hog cholera law provides that the use of hog cholera vaccines shall be only on written permit from the State Veterinarian, the position Dr. Zweigart holds. Since February 1 of this year he has issued such permits only to qualified veterinarians. If the proposed federal regulation is adopted, he will cancel all such permits effective December 31.

Dr. Zweigart said the proposal to ban vaccines is part of the nationwide hog cholera eradication program. "While vaccines once served a useful purpose when the disease was widespread, they have also at times been a source of hog cholera," he said. "As incidence of the disease has been drastically reduced, or completely eradicated in so many states, it is believed by many that we have reached a stage in the eradication program where eliminating use of the vaccines is the next important step."

Dr. Zweigart also announced that, effective immediately, Commissioner Graham is waiving a regulatory requirement that all garbage-fed swine must be vaccinated against hog cholera. Garbage feeders who wish to continue having their swine vaccinated may do so until such time as the use of vaccines is banned in the State.
