Veteran's Administration

EDITOR'S NOTE: Below are authoritative answers by the Veterans Administration to some of the many current questions from former servicemen and their families. Further information on veterans benefits may be obtained at any VA office.

Q — After filing an application for VA educational allowance, how long would it take to receive an assignment of a VA claim number?

A — You should receive your assignment of a VA claim number in approximately two weeks.

Q— I am a student going to school below college level. Does the law require that I submit a monthly certificate of attendance?

A — Yes, you must complete and submit to VA a certificate of attendance each month. You fill out Section A. Section B is certified, and signed by a school official and returned to VA. Only after receipt of this information can the VA pay on.

Q— I have heard the maximum loan guaranty is now $12,500. My certificate of eligibility shows $7,500. Should I bring it in to have it changed?

A — That is not necessary. The increase covers all certificates. You will be automatically covered under the new limits.

Q — I am a veteran attending college. Does the law require that I submit a monthly certificate of attendance?

A — No. But during the last full month of your quarter, semester or term, you will receive a certificate of attendance which must be completed and returned to the Veterans Administration as soon as possible. Failure to complete and return this form will bar you from future educational assistance.

SENATOR SAM ERVIN SAYS

WASHINGTON — Hearings have been scheduled by the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee, of which I am Chairman, to review the operation of the 1964 Act for the Hospitalization of the Mentally ill in the District of Columbia.

While the Federal Government's responsibility in this area of the law is limited to the District of Columbia, these hearings will be in the nature of a national accounting of procedures relating to the liberty and hospitalization of the mentally ill. The 1964 Act was a model code for the mental health procedures in this country. I am pleased that it resulted from the investigations and hearings conducted during my tenure as Chairman of this Senate Subcommittee.

Those investigations pointed up some acute problems arising out of the cumbersome laws and procedures surrounding the treatment of those suffering from mental illness. While our investigation disclosed some serious "due process" of law problems involving such persons in many states, its primary purpose was to modernize procedures to protect the medical and legal rights of the mentally ill who reside in the District of Columbia.

A major source of the problem was found to lie in the prevalent attitude concerning mental illness. Most individuals suffering from this illness have been faced with archaic laws based upon the popular conception that to admit to such an illness carried a social stigma which was often impossible to gain admission to a public hospital for treatment on a voluntary basis. On the other hand, judicially ordered hospitalization meant an automatic loss of the basic rights of a

Under that system, the District of Columbia law assured the mentally ill but one fight, the right to be forgotten.

The Subcommittee findings from those hearings became the basis of a new law, Public Law 88-597, which was enacted on September 15, 1964. Its passage represented a step forward for the civil liberties of these often forgotten individuals.

Primarily, the 1964 Act was designed to encourage voluntary hospitalization; to define and protect the rights of a patient once he was in the hospital; and to ensure, as far as legally possible, that no stigma was attached to the fact that he had been hospitalized for mental illness. Under that Act the judicial finding of a need for hospitalization was separated from the finding of legal incompetence. Thus Congress recognized that mental illness does not necessarily mean that one lacks the ability to exercise his rights.

The law also carefully defined for civil patients such rights as communication privileges; visitation rights; the capacity to seek release under certain conditions; and more important, the right to medical treatment, and not just custodial care.

Sufficient time has now elapsed to see how well the Act is functioning here in Washington. We shall now attempt to discover to what extent the constitutional rights of the mentally ill, the prospective mentally ill, and their families are being respected in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. I trust that these hearings will give a much needed accounting upon this important subject.

Suggestions On Saving Peanuts

"Many peanut farmers have stated that they are planning on saving their peanut seed from this years crop to plant in 1970. There are several suggestions that we would like to make in order to save quality seed. These are:

1. Dig seed peanuts before digging commercial crop.
2. Remove as much dirt as possible during digging. Place vines in inverted windrows. If windrow inverter is not available, reshake random windrow 24-48 hours after digging.
3. Leave in windrow until the moisture content is 20 percent or less.
4. Turn the windrow with a wheel rake or windrow turner in the morning of the day peanuts are to be combined to allow further drying of vines.
5. Combine during the afternoon using lowest possible cylinder speed. Under normal conditions this will be approximately 25 percent less than the standard cylinder speeds. This requires minor changes in sprockets on most combines to reduce the speed of the cylinders without reducing the speed of other components.
6. Adjust air flow just high enough to convey peanuts into bin. A burlap bag may be suspended over the bin to reduce impact damage.
7. Remove excessive LSK's and trash before drying.
8. Begin drying immediately. Do not leave peanuts in wagons overnight without airflow.
9. Dry using conditions recommended for the edible crop. Be sure to use at least the minimum recommended airflow rate which depends on initial moisture content. Use supplemental heat at night to give a 10-15 degrees F. temperature rise. Use natural air in the day.
10. Reduce kernel moisture to approximately 8-9 percent to reduce initial deterioration. Under normal conditions, seed in a warehouse or barn will equilibrate at 5-7 percent moisture.
11. Have a TZ or germination test to determine suitability of peanuts for seed.
12. Store in cool, dry location.
13. Moisture level should be increased to 9-10 percent before shelling to reduce splits and bald heads.
14. Remove LSK's and trash before shelling. Dispose of LSK's through commercial channels.
15. After shelling, remove bald-face and obviously damaged kernels, etc.
16. Remove kernels which will pass a 15/64 inch screen.
17. Treat with a good fungicide using care to apply the recommended dosage.

Social Security Administration

More than one and a third million Americans and one million of their dependents have learned they can count on Social Security — not just when they retire, but to help see them through misfortune NOW. They have one one thing in common: serious sickness or accident has caused them untold hardship. Some are ex-servicemen whose wounds disabled them. Some are workers who never missed a day of work until sickness or accident struck them down. Some are children whose father or mother suddenly became disabled. Each receive a monthly disability check from Social Security.

When Social Security began nearly 35 years ago it was only a program for retirement. But now it's a lot more than that. It has been improved to cover more and more instances of unforeseen catastrophe which strike the young as well as the old. Disability is just one of these instances. When you are talking about social security, you're talking about something to be counted on NOW. And when you're thinking about lifetime protection, You're thinking about social security.

Individuals who have questions about various parts of the Social Security program are urged to contact the Social Security Office to get proper and timely information. Asking a friend or neighbor who is a beneficiary for information about Soical Security is not always wise because the facts in each case are not necessarily the same. The people in the Social Security office at 401 S. Dyer Street, Elizabeth City, North Carolina, telephone 338-3931, will be glad to be of assistance.

In Fashion

Violet and purples are high on the fashion chart of color this season. Combine these colors with panne velvet and we have royal looking costumes.

Plaids are very popular. One costume features a short pleated skirt and a long coat—ankle length—of plaid woolen worn with a long overblouse in solid color.

Belts are back in style. They may be almost any width but the wide ones seem to be favored. They are used on dresses, coats and long blouses.

THIS IS THE LAW

By Robert E. Lee

For The N.C. Bar Association

Is a drunken person liable for damages done to the person or property of another?

Yes. Drunkenness is not a defense to those legal actions which lawyers call "torts" - wrongful or negligent acts, other than breach of contract. A court will afford a remedy in such cases in the form of an action for damages.

If a drunken person should be so negligently operating an automobile as to damage your property or to inflict bodily injuries to your person, you may recover a judgment from him to compensate you in money damages.

A drunken person is liable for the wrongful destruction of another's property to the same extent as if he were sober. It is immaterial that he was so drunk that he did not know what he was doing.

* * * * * *

May a drunken person be convicted of a crime?

Although there are some few exceptions, the general rule is that voluntary drunkenness furnishes no ground of exemption from responsibility for crime.

A person may be so drunk when he commits an act that he is incapable, at the time of knowing what he is doing, yet if the intoxication be voluntary, he is legally responsible for his criminal acts nevertheless under the general rule.

The most important exception to the general rule is found in those few cases where the law requires a specific intent to render an act a particular crime or degree of crime. Among the crimes requiring a specific intent are "willful, deliberate and premeditated" murder in the first degree, burglary, assault with intent to kill, and larceny.

Where a person is too drunk when he commits an act to entertain the specific intent, essential in order that the act may constitute a particular crime, and did not first form such intent and then became intoxicated, he is not responsible for that particular crime. If, however, one makes up his mind to do an act while sober, entertaining the necessary intent, and then becomes intoxicated and commits it, he is responsible. For example, if one makes up his mind to kill another, and then becomes drunk, and kills him, he is guilty of murder in the first degree.

Where a man is too drunk to entertain the specific intent necessary to constitute the act a particular crime, he frequently may be convicted of some lesser offense for which no specific intent is required.

BEHIND YOUR HEALTH

H. E. Kingman, Jr., D.V.M.

Striking similarities between multiple sclerosis (MS) and a disease induced in rats and other laboratory animals give hope that this lethal disorder may be treated or prevented.

MS most often strikes young adults, leading eventually to massive incapacity and death in the majority of patients. Remissions do occur but the disease usually resumes its course with vigor. About 500,000 Americans suffer from MS and related diseases.

Scientists at the University of California at Irvine, believe that multiple sclerosis is a malfunction of the normally protective immunity machinery of the body that makes it fight healthy tissue. The researchers found an antibody in the blood of some MS patients that attacks their own myelin or nerve-insulating material. Inflamed and damaged, the myelin develops scars which prevent the passage of nerve signals. They have shown conclusively that this is an allergic reaction within the system.

The similar condition in animals is Experimental Allergic Encephalitis (EAE). As with other allergies, these animals can be desensitized by an injection of the material to which they are allergic—in the way hay fever sufferers now are desensitized to ragweed! Possibly humans also could be given the treatment.

The National Society for Medical Research stresses the importance of comparative medicine—study of diseases occurring in man and animals. While no one can predict the results exactly, the hope is that multiple sclerosis also will be conquered through animal experimentation.
