V.A. Trained Physicians, Nurses, Health Workers

The Veterans Administration trained more than 53,000 physicians, nurses, and other health workers during fiscal 1971, toward the President's goal of expanding the number of health personnel for VA hospitals and the nation.

This was an increase of 4,000 trainees over fiscal 1970, and the agency estimates that the number training in its hospitals and clinics during the current fiscal year will exceed 56,000.

The 1971 total includes 10,731 resident physicians and interns who received all or part of their postgraduate medical education in VA hospitals, according to Stanley B. Morse, Director of the Durham VA Hospital.

In addition, about 12,500 medical students were provided a significant portion of their clinical training in VA hospitals. This figure includes some 9,100 students in clinical training in their last two years of medical school, Mr. Morse said.

Tray Of Stencils Left Off By Error; Many Miss Paper

If you failed to get your Perquimans Weekly last issue it was not due to the fault of your editor, but due to the two young men that stamp the papers each week.

A tray of stencils was overlooked in the stamping of the names on the mailing list. We are indeed sorry this happened and have cautioned the two young men stamping the papers to be more careful.

Week before last, the two, dropped a tray full of mixed stencils, stencils of names of subscribers that go out of North Carolina to other states. So, in placing them back in the tray, some names may not have gotten back in the slot they were supposed to be placed—this was due to the fact that a new mailing list was supposed to have been pulled a number of weeks ago—we still haven't received that.

We hope that we have had all the mishaps in the mailing department that we are going to have, and that your paper is in your mail box early next Thursday morning.
