Industry Warned
The swine industry in North Carolina was warned today that there is to be no movement of feeder pigs in the state until the state-wide embargo is changed by the State Veterinarian.
The warning was given today by North Carolina Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham in the face of five cases of hog cholera being found in the state since March 1.
"During this quarantine any movement of feeder pigs is a misdemeanor under the laws of the state of North Carolina, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both," Commissioner Graham warned, "both the buyer and seller will be prosecuted if these laws are broken. Herds which become infected as a result of such movement will not be eligible to receive indemnities."
"The state has a tremendous investment in the hog cholera eradication program and we cannot afford to risk that by moving feeder pigs until the survey can be completed which will determine the source of the hog cholera in the state," Graham continued.
"We are optimistic that we may prevent further spread of the disease and as soon as the investigation is completed we will again allow movement under a permit system."
"We are very much aware of the need to move these feeder pigs to the growout operation. We are equally aware of the potential for spread of this dangerous disease and we will not tolerate illegal movement."
