SAVE ON PLUMBING COSTS

If you've tried to ignore a constantly running leaky toilet because of today's high plumbing costs, here's a simple and inexpensive solution. A new plumbing device, which can be installed by anyone in minutes, will solve the problem once and for all.

The unit, called Fluidmaster, is a new type of toilet ballcock, which replaces the old fashioned ballcock used for generations inside most flush tanks to control water level. It not only offers positive water shut-off, but audibly "signals" water waste whenever the toilet tank ball, located at the bottom of the tank, is leaking water-water which can easily add dollars to a monthly bill.

With this totally redesigned ballcock, made out of corrosion resistant stainless steel and plastic, the troublesome float ball and arm are eliminated altogether. The rising water level in the tank lifts an integral plastic float. This in turn activates an internal valve designed to keep water flowing in at full strength from start to finish. Unlike the conventional ballcock which uses leverage from the float ball to hold back the water pressure, the Fluidmaster redirects this fluid energy to hold its valve shut. With the Fluidmaster, you no longer have to worry about bending the float arm to give the float more leverage, or endure a running toilet when the float ball begins to leak.

The new ballcock not only fills the tank faster, but eliminates the leaks, squeaks and whistles caused by a gradual slowdown when the tank is nearly full. Slow tankball leaks become easy to detect as well, because the sound of the Fluidmaster's "full-on" refill signals the homeowner that the tank is leaking, regardless of how quiet or small the leak.

Fluidmaster can be a real money-saver for one whose water system is tied to a pump either on a farm or at a camp. With the conventional ballcock or tank ball slowly leaking, toilet tank water can flood a septic tank or cesspool. If there's a constant demand for water on a farm, caused by toilet tank leakage, the pump will run continually on and off, thus not only wasting water but electricity needed to maintain the pump.

It's a relatively simple matter to replace the conventional ballcock with this new device. The water to the tank is shut off and the tank is drained by flushing once. The inlet pipe at the bottom is unscrewed and the old unit is lifted out including the float ball and arm. Then the new unit is attached into place and set for the required height of water.

Local hardware stores sell Fluidmaster for less than $5. The Model 200 fits all tanks. If you can't find one in your favorite store, write to Fluidmaster, Inc., 1800 Via Burton, Anaheim, California 92805, for the name of a local retail outlet.

N.C. Photographic Competition

Prizes are currently being held for the second North Carolina Photographic Competition and Exhibition.

Sponsored by the North Carolina Arts Council, a Division of the Department of Art, Culture and History, the first exhibition was held in 1959 and premiered at the State Fair. It then toured the state being shown at shopping centers, libraries, galleries, colleges, high schools, and other places where people gathered.

Full details of the 1973 event will be announced later this month, and the competition will be open free of charge to all North Carolina photographers, both professional and amateur. Judging will be by three out-of-state, professional photographers.

Tentative plans call for adoption of an exhibition theme dealing with North Carolina's past, present, and future. A definite title and more specific guidelines will be announced later. In addition to the primary exhibition, several prominent photographers will be invited to exhibit examples of their work out of the past for which they would most like to be remembered.

Exhibition entries, which will include prints in both black-and-white and in color, will be judged in June. It is anticipated that approximately 120 photographs will be selected for showing, and ten gold medals will go to the top winners, each accompanied by a cash prize of $100.

Following the initial showing, the exhibit will be broken into several smaller collections and shown at public places across the state. Plans also include later showings at museums and galleries outside North Carolina.

For further information on the upcoming statewide photographic competition and exhibition, write to the North Carolina Arts Council, 109 East Jones Street, Raleigh 27611.
