The owner of a family farm must be ready to make countless management decisions right on the spot in order to adjust his farming operation to meet weather, soil, price, labor, transportation, mechanical failure and other variable conditions.

Most of all, his success is due to his personal involvement in both management and labor input.

Personal Involvement

"There is no such thing as an operation manual for a farm or any substitute for close personal involvement."

The author of that statement is Dan Cordtz, author of a recent "Fortune" magazine article dealing with corporate farming, which he describes as "a tough row to hoe."

Cordtz finds no evidence whatsoever of a corporate threat to family farming. He noted, instead, that corporate farming as a profitmaker has been a spectacular failure, with overhead costs growing much more profusely than the crops.

In fact, corporate farming "... has turned out to be so profitless and trouble-filled that many of the corporations which became involved in the 1960's are now in full retreat," Cordtz said.

If big corporations with adequate financial backing, tough management know-how and a long string of industrial successes to their credit can't make a success of farming, how can Mr. and Mrs. U. S. Farmer make a go of it?

More often than not, Mr. and Mrs. U. S. Farmer not only make a go of it, but also raise and educate a family, support their church, pay substantial taxes for schools and other government programs, and put something away for the time when they can no longer work a 50 or 60 hour week producing food and fiber.

Covers Have Advantages And Disadvantages

North Carolina tobacco growers are expected to make more extensive use than ever this year of plastic plant bed covers. Those who are using this type cover for the first time may run into some problems.

There are advantages and disadvantages in using plastic as opposed to cotton or cloth covers; North Carolina State University extension tobacco specialists point out.

Air and soil temperatures are considerably higher under plastic, both during the night and day. This higher temperature promotes faster germination and plant growth, which is considered a plus for the plastic.

Another advantage, the plastic cover costs less than the cloth cover, although the plastic usually can only be used once while the cotton may be used twice or more.

The plastic has to be used when the plant bed is fumigated with methyl bromide -- as nearly all beds are -- so the same plastic can be used for the bed cover during the plant-growing period. There are two major disadvantages in using solid plastic covers. First, excessively high temperatures may damage the stand and growth of plants. Second, since water cannot penetrate the plastic, a shortage of soil moisture could affect plant development.

The use of solid plastic requires more careful management, especially in regard to ventilation and moisture. Also, since leaching of nutrients doesn't occur under solid plastic and low soil moisture results in high salt concentrations in the root zone, there is a definite possibility of fertilizer injury.

To minimize this problem the NCSU specialists suggest that the fertilizer rate be reduced by 50 percent of that normally applied where cotton covers are used.

One way to reduce risks of high temperatures and low soil moisture is to use perforated plastic covers. One-quarter inch holes about two inches apart seem to be adequate. Temperatures will still be higher than under cotton covers.

Some of the best results have been obtained by placing the cover flat on the bed, supported by a thin layer of straw. About 15 to 20 pounds of clean wheat or pine straw per 100 square yards has worked well.

As a rule, plants grown under plastic are ready for transplanting about 60 days after seeding as compared to about 90 days with cotton bed covers.

A third bed cover, nylon, is expected to be used on a limited basis in North Carolina this year. This material is porous enough to let air, water and fungicides through and does not permit build up of excessively high temperatures. Soil and air temperatures under nylon are intermediate between plastic and cotton. Plants under nylon will probably be ready for transplanting 7 to 10 days earlier than with cotton covers.

Snug Harbor Youth Group Formed Recently

On Saturday, January 13, the Snug Harbor Youth Group met at the Club House at 2:00 p.m. and held its organizational meeting. Nancy Hagan was elected president, Junior Simpson vice-president, and Mark Cummings treasurer.

The president's first act was to appoint an executive committee for the planning of the programs for the year. Junior representative of this group is Mike Hagan.

The group will meet the second Saturday of each month throughout the year except for the summer recess.

The next meeting on February 10 will be devoted to a ping-pong tournament for the younger group from 2:00-4:00 p.m. A Valentine's Day dance for members over twelve years old and their friends will be held from 8:00-11:00 p.m.

Parental advisers for the January meeting were Mrs. Ernest Simpson, Mrs. Lawrence Bruner, and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Thompson. Refreshments were provided by the Civic League of Snug Harbor.

Birth Announcement

Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Janak of Sunset Drive, Hertford, announce the birth of their first child, a son, Christopher Charles, weighing 7 lbs. 12 oz., born at Albemarle Hospital January 10, 1973.

The Family of Dorothy White Karas acknowledges with grateful appreciation your kind expressions of sympathy shown during the passing away of our loved one.

HOME BUILDING

In spite of price increases, 1972 was another record year for home-building, with over 2.1 million housing starts. In the first three months alone, housing starts in the United States were up 31 percent over the same period of 1971. The median price for new one-family houses was $26,900, reports W. C. Warrick, extension housing specialist, North Carolina State University.

Hard work may be good for man but there are generous souls willing to give their share to someone else.
