Protecting The Earth; Sunrise Service Is Set

There are limits to what one individual can do to protect the environment. That's where ECOS, Inc. comes in. An environmental organization, ECOS was founded in 1969 at UNC by a handful of graduate students. It now has more than 800 members of all ages from all over North Carolina and there are chapters in Rocky Mount, Raleigh, Durham and Chapel Hill. The executive office is in Chapel Hill. ECOS advises its members on sound environmental lifestyles and also involves itself in large environmental issues. It helped block plans to pave a road in the Linville Gorge area, has opposed stream channelization and is a plaintiff in the New Hope Dam suit.

"The real reason most people join ECOS," said Executive Director Watson Morris, "is that, simply because of other commitments, they don't have time to spend a lot of time looking after the environment. That's where ECOS comes in. We're the professionals and have much more time than the average busy citizen."

There are three types of ECOS memberships: $5 annually for individuals; $10 annually for couples; and $2.50 per semester for students. The organization was recently granted tax exempt status so any contributions are now tax deductible. Membership in ECOS includes subscriptions to its two publications -- the Environmental Bulletin and the Newsletter. Both are published about five times a year.

The Newsletter discusses activities of each chapter and advises individuals how to live with minimal adverse effects on the environment. The Environmental Bulletin discusses timely environmental issues in depth. The latest issue was a 25-page paper opposing Carolina Power & Light Company's plan to build a nuclear generating station in Wake County. (This paper plus an 85-page appendix was also sent to members of the General Assembly, newspaper editors and local and state government officials.) Other topics covered in the Environmental Bulletin include the New Hope Dam and the steady-state economy. In its statement on the CP & L project, ECOS presents a number of alternatives to present power consumption practices. "We show many, many ways in which consumption of energy can be greatly reduced," Morris said. "The power companies, as far as I can tell, are interested mainly in increasing supply. ECOS is interested in decreasing demand. That is the fundamental difference in our approach."

ECOS also is interested in preserving wilderness areas and in promoting bicycling. "One of the latest things we've done, and one of which we are proudest, is suggest to a number of banks in the state that they use recycled paper for such things as form letters and envelopes. Central Carolina Bank, I am happy to report, is now testing recycled paper for some of its routine printing. As far as we are concerned, CCB is a real leader in this area," Morris said.

Although recycled paper is more expensive at the present time, Morris says there are several good reasons for its use: conservation of energy, conservation of forest resources, and alleviation of litter. "A fundamental problem today is that we have a high consumption, high waste economy," he said. "We need to change that to a low consumption, low waste economy."

"I am optimistic about the potential for changing people's views and their habits," he continued. "There are considerable grounds for this optimism. People are becoming more interested in the environment and want to help. Many more people are calling us for advice. And the price of waste paper is going up -- an indication that the demand for recycled paper is increasing. There are lots of signs that the situation is improving."

The ECOS membership includes people of all ages. The Chapel Hill chapter, for example, is composed of students, faculty and townspeople.

"We like to consider our members not simply as people who gave $5 once upon a time, but as active people who can occasionally be called on to write a letter or to do other things," Morris said.

Since receiving tax exempt status, ECOS has received a grant from the America the Beautiful Fund to produce a 30-second television film promoting bicycling. As a tax exempt organization, Morris feels ECOS has a better chance to receive similar grants and contributions.

Anyone interested in joining ECOS, making a contribution or receiving the publications should write ECOS, Inc., Box 1086, Chapel Hill, N.C. 27514.

By MARION SWINDELL

The story is told of a man walking down the street with a friend. They stopped to buy a newspaper from a very rude newsie. The purchaser of the paper was exceptionally nice and courteous to the newsie, but he didn't even acknowledge their presence.

"He is like that all the time," shrugged the man. "Then why do you continue to be polite to him?" asked his friend.

"Why not?" he inquired. "Why should I let him decide how I'm going to act." How many of us react to people when we should act? We often let others dictate how we will be -- offer an impolite reception -- offer an impolite reaction.

After all is said -- the greatest people are those who do not let others decide how they are going to act.

A little kindness sometimes breaks down the barriers of indifference.

THOUGHT TO REMEMBER: "You alone can decide what kind of person you will be today."
