TUNA STYLES

Tuna comes in a variety of packs, including solid, chunk styles and flaked or grated. Which one you should choose depends on how to plan to use it, says Mrs. Ruby Uzzie, extension consumer marketing economist, North Carolina State University. Solid-pack tuna can be used as the center of an attractive salad, chunk-style is just right for casseroles and skillet dishes and flaked or grated tuna is ready for blending to make sandwiches, dips or salads.

1974 Disease Control Begins Now

For farmers with an eye for the future, the first step toward limiting next year's crop disease problem will be taken before this year's crops are harvested.

Correctly diagnosing current problems is an essential first step in avoiding the same problems next year, suggest North Carolina State University extension plant pathologists.

"Information of this type is important and necessary in order to know what system of disease control to use in 1974," commented Furney A. Todd, extension tobacco disease specialist at NCSU.

Todd compares the exercise to a doctor making a careful and thorough examination of the patient before prescribing medicine. "In this case, the grower is the doctor and it is up to him to determine major problems and how much damage is caused in each field," Todd noted.

He explained that a number of "prescriptions" that fit a certain set of tobacco disease problems and production practices have been worked out and are now being used effectively by many growers. New growers who may want to adopt a system for next year will have to make notes on what disease problems they are having with the current crop, where the problem is located and how serious it is.

Todd makes these suggestions:

First, check each field for disease symptoms, calling on assistance from the local county extension agent to help confirm the diagnosis.

Second, determine the infection level. For example, determine the amount of wilt or black shank damage present. To do this, count 100 plants in three different parts of the field and record the number of hills diseased in each 100 plants.

Washington Report

Congress is now in August recess; therefore, there is no legislative report to be made. Recently, I was asked to contribute an editorial to one of our daily papers giving my impressions of our District. Here are some of the excerpts from that editorial.

The First Congressional District of North Carolina is unique in many ways. It is one of the largest in the United States. Geographically, it is larger than any one of twelve states, which includes Maryland and Massachusetts. This, of course, imposes problems for our office due to the diversity of interest ranging from agriculture, increasing industrialization, recreation, and a growing seafood industry. It has one of the longest coastlines of any District in the United States. The size of our District becomes even more startling when compared with New York City, which alone has 13 Members of Congress.

Agriculture continues to be the major source of income for the First District; therefore, I consider myself fortunate to be a Member of the House Committee on Agriculture, for each Administration, if for no other reason than political purposes, attempts to change programs which were instigated by prior Administrations. The USDA has suggested that all supports and controls for various farm commodities be removed and that the farmer compete in what they term a "free market." This has been tried in the past without success. It is hoped that the Farm Bill enacted recently will assure our farmers of reasonable returns on their investments.

Problems seem to persist in the participation of the Federal Government in educational funding, both at the secondary and higher levels. Each Administration has different ideas of what should be done to improve our educational systems, but I remain convinced that the best approach is to return the Federal dollars without directions and restrictions, for certainly the administrators of both the state and local level are far more familiar with the problems and how money can be spent than the bureaucratic officials sitting behind their desks in Washington, D.C.

The need for improved highways in the First District is obvious. That is why I have consistently opposed diversion of highway funds for mass transit systems which would benefit only heavily populated urban areas and reduce the amount of money available for the maintenance and construction of highways.

Of prime importance to all citizens of the First Congressional District and the entire nation is that of providing improved health care, with more emphasis on preventive medicine. I think as soon as possible Congress must approve some federal health insurance plan which would help our citizens in meeting the mounting costs of hospital care. This, of course, includes the need for more training facilities and medical schools.

One, among many other problems, is the preservation of our coastline; and of course, there are many other plus and minuses which affect the First District, but perhaps our greatest asset is the quality of the people that comprise the First District. Several of our new industries have reported that they find a spirit of willingness to work and appreciation of jobs, seldom found anywhere else. Having the privilege of serving as the Representative in the Congress from this great District is in my opinion one of the highest honors that could come to any man, and one for which I am extremely grateful.

Sam Ervin Report

WASHINGTON - There has been much comment over the possibility that the President might recommend a salary increase this year for Members of Congress, Federal judges, and certain top-level officials of the Executive branch and that Congress would not reject such an increase in Federal salaries.

I do not favor an increase in salaries for Members of Congress and the other officials covered by the Federal Salary Act of 1967. In view of the Nation's critical economic and financial situation, I believe it would be a terrible example for public officials to accept salary increases at this time. Only 5 years ago Members of Congress received salary increases of over 40 percent - from $30,000 to $42,500. I do not believe that any further increase can be justified during fiscal 1974.

In my judgement, Congress ought not to have enacted the Federal Salary Act of 1967. That Act established a nine-member Commission to review salaries of Members of Congress, judges, and top-level Executive branch officials every 4 years and to recommend whatever changes it felt desirable. This Commission presents its recommendations to the President who can follow, modify, or reject the Commission's recommendations. The President's

The President's recommendation is then submitted to Congress and takes effect within 30 days unless Congress disapproves all or part of them or enacts a separate pay bill. Legislation which would authorize the Commission to make its review and recommendation on a biennial rather than a quadrennial basis, S. 1989, has now been turned down by the House. In effect, the House has refused to clear the way for a pay raise later this year for Members of

SNAIL CONTROL

To control slugs and snails, bait or spray hiding places thoroughly. If the problem is indoors and outdoors, North Carolina State University extension entomologists suggest using metaldehyde baits. If the problem is outdoors only, you can use Zectran 25 percent wettable powder, mixing five tablespoons per gallon. Always follow label directions.
