Burning Permits Required

Brush Burning Permit Law No. 14-139 requires that persons starting fires within 500 feet of areas under protection of the State Forest Service must have a permit from the State Forester or one of his duly authorized agents. This permit is required between October 1 and June 1 inclusive and there is no charge for it.

A burning permit is not required if burning within 100 feet of an occupied dwelling and a permit is not required if burning between the hours of 4 p.m. and midnight. However, burning permit does not relieve you of complying to local Health Department and Board of Air and Water Resource standards.

The burning permit law is not intended to be an inconvenience to the public but merely a fire prevention tool. The benefits are (1) the Forest Service will know where burning is taking place and when, (2) what type and how much burning activity, (3) if precautionary actions are being taken, and (4) how to get in touch with permittee in the event of hazardous fire weather if burning is cancelled.

The burning permit is one of many indicators a Forest Ranger must use in organization by their attendance. "We deal with crime after it happens", Walker told some 200 people from the Albemarle Area. "We need to get to the source of it." Walker said as a judge he could almost pinpoint or trace to the home the reasons for law violations.

The judge described a move to reach predelinquents by moving planning his forest fire control program to prevent forest fires and to keep them small when they occur. For more information on burning permits contact your local N.C. Forest Service County Ranger.

juvenile probation from social services to the court system. "If we can stop children from criminal inclination, then the next generation may not need as many law enforcement officers," he said.

The last session of the General Assembly placed juvenile probation under the court system in an effort to relieve the overworked Social Services system. Walker said this might be an answer if properly financed and staffed.

"It makes me sick to send anyone to training school," Walker said. "Everyone—the home, school, church, community and even the courts—have failed the youngster and the training schools will too," Walker said.

He added, "There is something missing in North Carolina on this. I think it is between the probation area and the training school."

Walker said the individual alone cannot change the direction. He praised the Albemarle Law and Order Association for uniting as a group.

Dog Pound Set For County Use

By FRANCINE SAWYER

All residents in Perquimans County now have a place to deposit unwanted dogs or cats.

A new dog pound was recently built near the Hertford Water Tank on Grubb Street Extended which will serve as depository for stray or unwanted dogs and cats.

According to Ray White, county dog warden, the building houses five pens inside. Also at the site is a dog and cat depository, which can be used 24 hours a day.

There is a door cut into the building which has a pen inside. Anyone desiring to place a cat or dog in the building can do so, anytime.

White does pick up stray dogs he spots as well as those who he receives complaints about. However, cats are not picked up. They must be brought to the pound.

All requests and questions are handled through the Perquimans County Health Department. Calls must go there. A message with the name and address of the caller is taken to be given to White.

After animals are at the pound for a certain period of time and are not claimed or picked up by owner or potential pet owner, they are gased.

The pound has its own gas chamber for killing the animals. After the animals are gased they are buried in a land fill.

Every effort, however, is made to find a home for the stray pets, according to White.

Persons interested in picking up a pet from the pound may do so. A boarding fee is charged (amount depends on how long the dog or cat has been there) and a fee is charged for a rabies vaccination.

White said that every dog which leaves the pound must have a rabies shot.

White has been the county inspector for more than 20 years.

All requests, he said, are handled on a first come first serve basis.

However, any time someone is bitten by a dog, this comes first for White.

The town of Hertford and the county is served by the dog pound. Therefore, the town and county have shared expenses on this facility.

The building was built free of labor charge by an adult education carpentry class of College of the Albemarle.
