By MARION SWINDELL

There is a story told about a man riding down the beach on a bicycle and he saw a young man out in the water calling for help. Immediately the man jumped from his bicycle and swam to the boy's rescue.

"Thanks, mister, for saving my life," said the boy. "That's all right, son; just prove that your life was worth saving."

You may feel that the man made a rather crude rather, and in a sense it is rather a hard way of looking at the situation. Or is it? There are so many blessings in the lives of all of us that we take for granted. The cost and sacrifices that have been made for us are so often forgotten.

Our freedom was won by others and by looking today at many of our actions they could easily say, "Were they worth it?"

It was Goethe who said: "... each generation must win anew its basic freedoms." In a sense, we must start from scratch, and that is a great responsibility.

If You Love Her...

Tell her. She'll never know if you don't. Whether she's bold or shy, a gad-about or stay-at-home, an angel or little devil, she'll be pleased to know that you love her, too.

Tell her this St. Valentine's Day. You have nothing to lose, and everything to gain. After all, Sam says, "Love is wanting to make someone happy, even if you have to say, 'Good-bye'."

Just remember - you have to say, "Hello", first.
