HOW TO COMPARE AND

Economists at N.C. State University have made income comparisons of broilers grown on the Perdue Contract to tobacco and peanuts. They found that the net income from 1 Perdue Broiler House will equal the income from 3.3 acres of tobacco or 15 acres of peanuts.

In this comparison, no value was placed on the land required for the crops. Since only 1 acre is required for each 16,000 capacity broiler house - considerably more land is required to achieve the same net income from tobacco and peanuts. Of course, if a farmer is renting tobacco or peanut land - he would have to tend considerably more acres than those mentioned in this comparison - the actual number of acres depending on the rental agreement.

Growing broilers allows you to maximize your labor as well as your land. With a Perdue broiler house you don't have to worry about hiring extra labor. One person can tend to 16,000 broilers in just 3 hours each day. And that extra labor can decrease your profits. So don't give your profits away - Grow with Perdue.
