Oyster Shell Crafts Can Be Made At Home

Use natural materials for making gifts, suggests Mrs. Rebecca Hall, home economics extension agent, New Hanover County.

One commonplace, and usually ignored, item that coastal residents and visitors might collect and use is the oyster shell, she adds.

Shells can be glued and stacked together to make ashtrays and similar items, the agent notes.

Oyster shells are easy to work with, Mrs. Hall points out. Clean them thoroughly first. The agent recommends bleaching the shells in a solution one-third liquid bleach and two-thirds water, until the desired whiteness is reached.

Tobacco Variety Fits Export Buyers Demand

A new N. C. Agricultural Experiment Station tobacco release will give growers a wider selection of varieties that can be grown for the important flue-cured export market.

Dr. Kenneth R. Keller, in charge of tobacco research at North Carolina State University, said the variety NC 79 has many of the characteristics of the type of tobacco that has been in strongest demand by foreign buyers.

"I think NC 79 will fill a need that we have recognized for another variety that will produce the kind of medium to heavy bodied cured leaf that export buyers seem to prefer," Keller said. About 35 to 45 per cent of the U. S. flue-cured leaf is sold abroad.

NC 79 is one of the three new varieties developed by N. C. Agricultural Experiment Station scientists and released this year. The others are NC 12 and NC 98.

Seeds of these new lines were increased by commercial seed growers during the 1975 season and are being marketed currently by these seed firms for planting the 1976 crop.

Keller described NC 12 as a domestic type tobacco, medium to thin bodied and light orange in color.

It has moderate resistance to black shank and is susceptible to root knot nematodes. It produced an average yield of 2,907 pounds in four official variety tests last year. This compared with 2,833 pounds for NC 2326 and 2,890 pounds of NC 95 in the same trials.

NC 79 yield average in these trials was 3,097 pounds, one of the highest among the 21 varieties grown. This tobacco produced a cured leaf that was medium to heavy bodied and deep orange in color. It has moderate resistance to black shank, resistance to root knot nematodes and is moderately tolerant to brown spot. It is similar to NC 2326 in having a low number of ground suckers.

The third new NCSU-developed tobacco, NC 98, is regarded as an intermediate between the lighter bodied domestic types and the heavier export types. Keller said it should help fill in some of the "gray area" between domestic and export type leaf. It produces yields similar to NC 2326 and NC 95. It is moderately resistant to black shank and Granville wilt and is resistant to root knot nematodes. The cured leaf is medium in body and predominantly orange in color.

Billy Van Name of Roanoke, Va. is spending this week with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Nixon.
