Commission To Enforce Local Wildlife Laws

RALEIGH — As of September 1, 1977, the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission will begin to assist local law enforcement authorities in enforcing all local wildlife laws pertaining to hunting and trapping in the State. The Wildlife Commission was given this additional authority when the General Assembly passed House Bill 340 (Chapter 120) in the legislative session just completed.

"Specifically, the act gives us the authority — previously lacking — to enforce all local laws respecting game animals, furbearing animals and birds, including those local laws which prohibit or restrict hunting from, to, or across public roads and highways," said a Commission spokesman. "The act also includes authority to enforce local laws which prohibit or restrict the taking of specified animals or birds.

"Many of these local laws have been on the books for years, and some may be badly outdated," continued the spokesman. "Although the laws were in effect until this recent bill was passed, we had no authority to enforce most of them. County Sheriffs' Departments and other law officers have heretofore had that authority, but now we will also be involved."

The Wildlife Commission spokesman pointed out that the effects of this extended enforcement would, in most cases, probably not be noticeable to many people until the opening of the fall hunting seasons. "We want to be certain that sportsmen have ample notification of the new requirement that we enforce these local laws so that they can familiarize themselves with any local laws in their area and avoid being in violation," said the spokesman. "We are currently preparing a listing of all the affected local laws. This list will be ready for dissemination to interested sportsmen prior to the opening of the fall hunting seasons."

The authority to enforce local laws will apply to the entire State with the exception of those lands under control of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians.

Pollution

Environmental Management of the N.C. Department of Natural and Economic Resources.

The Environmental Management Division, in turn, has entered into an agreement with the N.C. Soil and Water Conservation Commission delegating responsibility for preparing the agricultural part of the 208 plan — as most people call it now — to the Commission.

To work out an agricultural plan, the Commission has designated an Agricultural 208 Planning Group with a cross-section of expertise. This includes not only the N.C. Soil and Water Conservation Commission, which provides a chairman, but also the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service, USDA-Soil Conservation Service, N.C. Department of Agriculture, the North Carolina Grange and the Farm Bureau. This group meets regularly, and members work on various parts of the plan.

For example, the Soil Conservation Service is responsible for planning a program that will reduce the amount of sediment reaching streams to an acceptable level.

The N.C. Department of Agriculture will work on pesticides, while the Agricultural Extension Service will cover nutrients, animal wastes, and salinity. The Soil Conservation Service is making an Erosion and Sediment Inventory of the entire state, including both rural and urban lands. Other agencies are doing similar jobs. When the agricultural agencies complete the first phase of the study, they will assist the Division of Environmental Management in determining those sub-basins that have the highest pollution potential for agricultural activities.

Part of the job will be to determine best management practices to protect the land and water resource. Best management practices are proven conservation practices that farmers, in many cases, have been using for decades. Such things as contour stripcropping, terraces, grassed waterways, field borders and conservation tillage will all be used to keep the water clean. Other practices that will do the job are being worked out by other cooperating agencies.

The goal is simple: restore and maintain clean water. The first plan for North Carolina is due on the same date as other states; November 1, 1978. So time is getting rather short. Most people do not believe the entire problem will be solved a year and a half from now, but they do want to make a start.

For those with a lawn, farm, shopping center or other area that may be contributing to pollution of a nearby stream, there is no need to panic. But there is a need to start working to reduce all forms of water pollution. The control of non-point pollution will not only affect every North Carolinian but will also require the cooperation of almost every citizen.

DAIRY FOOD SHORTS

A tasty variation of the Mexican cheese sandwich is the quesadilla — a Mexican cheese turnover. Place a slice of milk, meltable cheese, such as Monterey Jack, on a heated tortilla. Dust lightly with chili powder, fold and fasten with a toothpick. Bake on a buttered cookie sheet until the cheese melts and the outside becomes crisp and brown.

You get a bargain when it comes to whipping cream. One cup of whipping cream becomes two cups of whipped cream after it is whipped.

A half cup of grated Cheddar cheese blended with half a stick of butter and 1 tablespoon of chili powder creates a new taste in sandwich spreads. Cut in strips, it is a delectable canape when browned under the broiler.

Wednesday from 10-11 a.m. for grades one through three; Thursday from 10-11 a.m. for grades four through six; and Friday from 10-11 a.m. for preschool and kindergarten. Also, your child can still enter the summer reading derby and help maintain his reading skills through the summer.

New Books

The Duchess Of Suke Street by Mollie Hardwick is a novel about the best cook in London who becomes the mistress of the Prince of Wales.
Our Appalachia by Laurel Shackelford is an oral history of the mountains told by the mountaineers themselves.
Bird Of Passage by Mai Zetterling is a novel of a woman's wandering brought on by overwhelming grief and tragedy.
West Of Railroad by Swight Bennett is a novel of a western town off to a new start.

Marsha Powell Enjoys Agricultural Studies

It's more rare than not that one can find a lovely young woman who has the interest to sit in class to learn more about the intricacies of housing livestock and how to better manage farm forestland. Most 21-year-olds are thinking about sun and sand, rock concerts or perhaps a Summer wedding at this time of the year.

Pretty Marsha Powell is not too far removed from the pleasures enjoyed by her peers but, in a sense, she does hear a different drummer. Two nights each week from 5 until 10 o'clock, she attends the Veterans Farm Training Program classes at College of the Albemarle. On Tuesdays, she learns about livestock housing and equipment from Carroll Davis, and each Thursday, Everett White teaches his course in farm forest management.

Miss Powell is something of a guest student at the community college. She is regularly enrolled at N.C. State University and has a double major in animal science and agricultural business. When she returns to Raleigh this Fall, she will begin her junior year. The 1974 Peace College Associate in Arts graduate will receive her Bachelor of Science degree from State in the Spring of 1979.

Her interest in farming and animals is a natural one. She comes from an agricultural family, likes to be outdoors and has helped around the family farm in Shawboro since she was nine years old. Marsha is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Powell. Her father farms and is engaged in a swine raising operation involving a herd of between 2,500 to 3,000 hogs.

She decided to enroll in the two courses at COA this summer to broaden her knowledge of the complex business that farming has become. She doesn't expect to receive transfer credits for the courses at State University because the three-year VFT program is offered as a technical specialty, but as she said, "I'm learning a lot just from listening because most of the students have their own operations and have been farming a long time."

The young woman has no specific plans for the future. When she graduates she is considering possible employment as a livestock chemicals salesperson or teaching. There is one thing certain in her mind; eventually, Marsha Powell intends to return to Currituck County where it all began for her.

BACK FOR MORE — Marguerite Sawyer and H.O. Owens, two of the 12 students who were among the first to graduate from College of the Albemarle's three-year Evening Program by attending classes solely at night, are back for more at the Technical Center. The two Business Administration graduates returned to COA to finish the third in a series of data processing courses which will give them credit for a year of computer programming required of business majors who transfer to four-year institutions. Both Mrs.

Sawyer of Gregory and Owens of Elizabeth City began their evening studies at the community college in 1974. They are now working toward the completion of their full degrees. Other Evening Program classmates who graduated in June include Lee Bonner, Darrell Brady, Willie Hinton, Bernice McBroy, Jule Owens, Elijah Purkett, Joe Sawyer and Paul Winslow, all of Elizabeth City; Shirley Bryant of Belvidere; and Ronnie Sawyer of Edenton.
