

To The Editor Teachers Not Buildings

To The Editor:
I've read both "Letters to the Editor" of recent date written by Mr. J.P. Perry Jr. and Miss Lynn Hurdle (and others). Both are concerned citizens but with divergent views on the bond issue of Nov. 8th.

Mr. Perry did dwell on "taxes" — unavoidably. How else can the "Bond" and its benefits be measured in cost? I saw Mr. Perry talking not against education but for getting more of it per dollar spent; with an eye toward any future commitments the county may have to assume. It was gratifying to see young Miss Hurdle (and associates) interested in a subject normally the concern of her elders.

Sadly, to my thinking, they took a popular but mistaken view on several points as follows:

1. That older people, whose children have finished school, have lost their concern for the welfare of young folks.

2. They equate newer buildings with improved education.

I agree with Mr. Perry that the old school plan can be brought up to "Standard" and thus save money which, to my mind, would be better spent encouraging the best teachers to come here.

It is the teachers, not the buildings, that impart the knowledge so badly needed by young folk to cope with today's lifestyle.

Think of body
as machine

The average working person needs re-habilitating — physical re-habilitating. Think of your body as a machine. Proper maintenance guarantees increased life.

An important part of your body's maintenance is exercise. Sustained exercise 30 minutes per day at least three times per week throughout life promotes strength and circulatory fitness which, in turn, leads to improved posture, greater nutrition, less stress, lower blood pressure, stronger coronary arteries, and a stronger mental capability. Exercise is a sensible, stress-reducer. Consult an expert, if you wish, but get started, soon — when you jog by the Pharmacy, wave; you won't be needing our services, you healthy nut!
