Telephone Service Is People...!

A MAZE of complex electronic equipment makes your telephone work, day after day after day. But telephone service is more than parts and impulses.

Telephone service is people . . . people like the cable splicer.

Cable splicing is a lot like knitting. You have to know what you're doing, and you have to take your time. When a cable splicer opens up a cable with 600 wires in it, he has to know how to match them up . . . and he has to know how in sunshine . . . rain . . . storm. He's just one of many skilled, dedicated people who help keep you in touch with the rest of the world.

At your telephone company, people are the common denominator.

The mentally handicapped think, too!

Mental illness and retardation are handicaps that can be treated and victims returned to happy, more productive lives. But greater awareness and understanding by the public is needed.

To be sure, attitudes held by the general public toward victims of mental disorders are quite often more dangerous than the handicaps themselves.
