Below average soybean, nut crops are anticipated

Perquimans County's corn growth most of the season and add 800 to 1000 pounds (of production will be well below the per acre average for the county this year, and the production forcasts for soybeans and peanuts are also dismal, according to chairman Bill Jester.

the overall county picture, cases are recovering at night. peanut production should be below average this year.

"Several parts of the county have been under severe drought stress for a month and a half or more and the outlook in these parts of the county is less optimistic," he said.

The drought and hot weather have also had a severe impact on the soybean crop, "The soybean crop will probably be the worst in some time," Jester said.

Jester placed Perquimans County peanut plants in three different categories.

The first is those peanuts are just now beginning to show signs of stress because of

The second category includes peanuts that have shown near normal growth up agricultural extension until the past three or four weeks and are now showing Jester said that looking at heavy water stress but in most > Finally, there are those peanuts showing slow, sporadic growth and fruiting. These peanuts do not have normal pod loads and there are swollen pegs present in fairly large numbers. Jester said that occurrences of the final category in the county are isolated.

> "The rains we got on the fourth or fifth of September should result in all three categories gaining considerable weight if harvesting is delayed," said Jester.

"A delay of harvesting in that registered near normal the last two categories could

"Odds are generally in our favor to delay digging," Jester said. "This is not always understood by some of our producers."

In 1979, peanut income was some $1.6 million for Perquimans County farmers on some 3,300 acres of land. The five year production average for peanuts is 2,765 pounds per acre.

Soybean production is projected to fall below the county's 29 bushels per acre five year average, with production in crops planted after small grains hardest hit.

The corn earworm has had little impact on soybeans this year, Jester said, attributing the fact to educational efforts by the extension service.

Some 35 farmers went to a corn earworm scouting school and despite increased pressure from the insect this year, there was significantly less damage than last year.

It was a matter of checking for the pest and knowing when to spray, Jester said. Reductions in corn and soybean production in Perguimans County are in keeping with national trends.

The August crop report put out by the U.S. Department of Agriculture predicted that corn production would be down 15 per cent from last year and soybeans would be
