here to stay. "NCNB is making a commitment to Hertford and Perquimans County — and we're offering many types of benefits and services to the community," said Rawls, who came to Hertford from his hometown of Washington.

Located on Grubb Street at Harris Shopping Center in Hertford, the bank was formerly known as Bank of North Carolina and recently merged with NCNB.

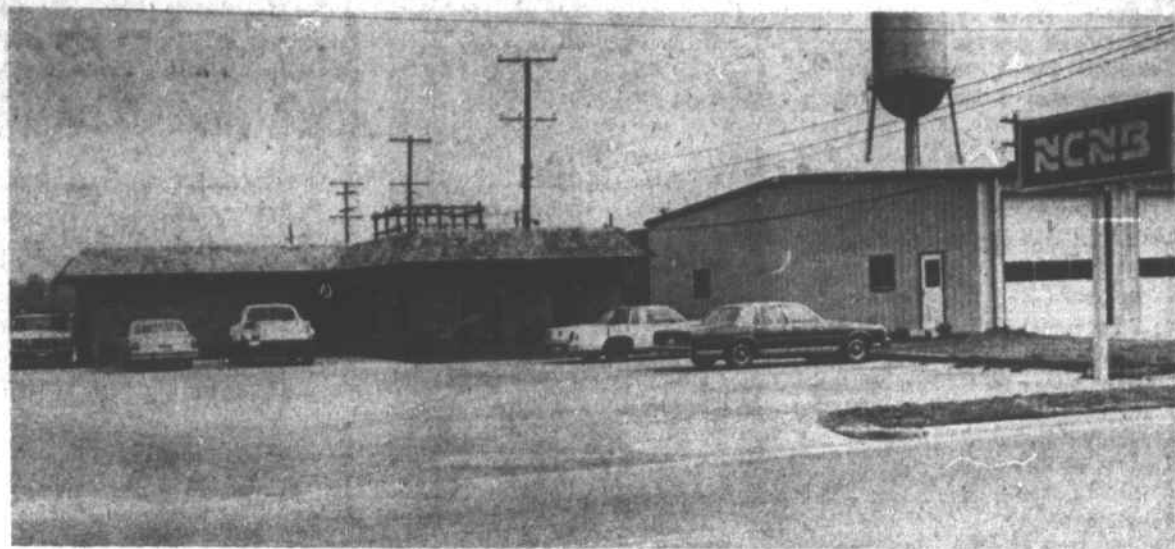

NCNB employs seven people in the Hertford bank including Leonard Love, branch manager, Diane Stallings, customer service representative and four tellers in addition to Rawls.

According to Rawls, NCNB is offering a variety of services to the community. In addition to the conventional checking and savings accounts, the bank offers a deluxe custom program, in which a variety of services are provided at no charge. Rawls said the bank offers a full slate of financial services including a discount brokerage service and a wide range of investments from negotiable certificates to municipal bonds.

NCNB Corporation, which owns NCNB National Bank of North Carolina is the largest bank holding company in the Southeast. Rawls said the bank is the 28th largest in the country.

"We just want the people to know that we are committed to the community and we're here to stay," Rawls said.
