Area volunteers saluted

The North Carolina School Volunteer Program is flourishing. Last year, more than 90,000 volunteers contributed approximately 1.7 million hours to help educate our children in schools across North Carolina.

Through the Adopt-A-School effort, over 2,000 adopters adopted one thousand schools. These adopters were parents, businesses, churches, and other organizations. Their assistance resulted not only in increased services, but in donations of supplies, equipment, and other needed items.

The involvement of volunteers has resulted in an increase of 25 percent in the number of persons giving their time to work with students, and the number of hours they have donated has increased 20 percent over the past three years.

Last week was designated as National Volunteer Week. Perquimans Central School honored its volunteers for their time and efforts in making this school year a success. On Friday, April 22, approximately 20 volunteers joined teachers and school system personnel in the school cafeteria.

A welcome was extended by the principal, Mr. Shelton Davis. After refreshments were served, the group was entertained by Mrs. James' 4th grade students.

Pledge of allegiance and a student solo was followed by some dialogues created by the students, a choral reading and a song learned in music class. Mr. Pat Harrell, school superintendent, was recognized and gave a short talk on the volunteer program. Certificates were then presented to the school volunteers as a small token of appreciation.

Over 125 people gathered last Wednesday at Albemarle Commission in Hertford to recognize area volunteers during National Volunteer Week.

Mary Mac Bradshaw, Director of the Office of Volunteer Services, Department of Human Resources in Raleigh, was guest speaker for the occasion. Mrs. Bradshaw gave encouraging and thankful remarks to the group. She, herself, is an active volunteer in many civic organizations.

"Volunteer service has saved the State of North Carolina $1,222,000 a day," Mrs. Bradshaw told the group.
