Best sellers prove changing

"I Hear America Singing, The Varied Carols I Hear."

—Walt Whitman

This summer, our nation turns 207 years old, a rather tender age far as nations go. One might think of the United States as a young adult in all its complexities, contradictions, naive failings, lost innocence and bursting potential for good and evil.

We Americans today and in our historic past have been a nation in an endless process of self-examination and change. Our best-seller list gives proof to that.

For example, William Least Heat Moon's stunning "Blue Highways: A Journey Into America", a poetic portrait of our country in the 1980's. The author takes to the backroads of the United States "in search of places where change did not mean ruin and where time and men and deed connected." In the process, he discovers not only his countrymen, but also the path his own life had taken.

Another is "The One-Minute Manager" by Blanchard and Jackson, which explains how one can improve productivity at the office.

"Color Me Beautiful" is a paperback edition of the very popular 1981 book of how to discover your natural beauty through the colors that make you look great and feel fabulous. It is a grand book.

"Travels with Charley: In Search of America", by John Steinbeck (1962) Steinbeck's classic account has held up quite well over the years, offering a perceptive freeze-frame portrait of postwar America.

Another important book in this area is, "The First Colonists: Documents on the Planting of the First English Settlements in North America 1584-1590."
