iar with the emergency agencies in the space provided.

The directory also includes new customer guides, which can be found in the front of every phone book. Customers should refer to these guides for dialing instructions, directory assistance numbers and other useful information about their service.

"One thing that should interest telephone users are the charts showing discount rate periods," said Daniels. "Discounts ranging from 25 percent are available during certain periods and result in significant savings. We want our customers to know about them," Daniels said.

Customers who do not receive their new directory by June 11, 1986 should call the telephone company business office.

"Our new telephone directory cover proudly highlights some of our state's most popular and scenic places and landmarks in our service area.

CAUSES OF EYESTRAIN

There is a collection of symptoms that people lump under the term "eyestrain." This includes tiring of eyes when reading, a tight or pulling sensation around the brows, and a general feeling of fatigue centered in the eyes.

Most often eyestrain simply indicates that an individual has reached his or her threshold of eye use and is ready for a rest. Your eyes do have limits, and the limits vary from person to person. By and large, you must live with this, but there are some common-sense measures you can take to maximize the amount of time you can read or use your eyes intensely before tiring. Getting enough sleep is important, as is a good diet. Good lighting can help, and so can taking a break from time to time.

If you do find that your eyes are getting tired more often and more easily, however, visit your optometrist. He or she can rule out muscle imbalance or the need for glasses — or prescribe them if necessary.
