HEARING FACTS AND FANCIES

Q. I've seen newspaper articles or the new "artificial ear." Does this mean that if I have surgery I won't need hearing aids any more?

A. There's much confusion about the so-called "artificial ear," really a cochlear implant. This surgical procedure is only recommended for persons who are profoundly hearing impaired (deaf) and cannot benefit from a hearing aid. It does not restore or replace lost hearing; the implanted device and assistive instrumentation allows sensory stimulation so persons may know when certain critical sounds take place.

Q. Is it true that rock music can cause hearing loss?

A. Prolonged, unprotected exposure to rock music, subway sounds, and noise from factory or farm machinery, jet engines and recreational vehicles such as snowmobiles and motorcycles will eventually lead to permanent sensorineural hearing loss. It is estimated that a huge percentage of those under 30 years of age already have suffered serious loss in the range of their hearing. Listening to music at a high decibel level through earphones can cause the same type of impairment as that from live concerts.

Q. How many of those with less than normal hearing are older persons?

A. It is estimated that nearly two-thirds of persons over age 65 have some type of hearing problem. And, that if we live long enough, all of us will lose some of our hearing through the aging process.

INSIGHT INTO EYESIGHT

 OPTOMETRIST

PRESCRIPTION AND FIT

So you've decided to trade in your eyeglasses for contact lenses. Who do you go to see?

Take the matter of prescription and fit. You simply stand a better chance for a successful fit under the care of a private contact lens specialist — be he an optometrist or an ophthalmologist — because of his training and his virtually unlimited choice of lenses. The contact lens specialist isn't committed to any one manufacturer, and can therefore choose exactly the lense which will best suit your individual needs.

There are some "optical stores," on the other hand, which may buy large quantities of contact lenses from one or two manufacturers in order to obtain volume discounts. While you may benefit from lower prices because of this, it may be the store's policy to try to fit you with one of their stock lenses regardless of your individual needs. You also can't be assured these stores will take the time and care necessary for a comfortable custom fit.
