

College of the Albemarle offers programs for residents

ELIZABETH CITY—Albemarle area residents will have their first opportunity to hear 1986-87 College of the Albemarle visiting artist Leslie Moye perform this Sunday afternoon. The talented cellist will make his public debut at four o'clock at the First United Methodist Church on South Road Street.

Moye's association with COA is his first experience as a member of the Visiting Artist Program established by the North Carolina Arts Council and the Department of Community Colleges. The Columbus, Georgia native has performed as principal cellist with a number of symphony orchestras.

The artist says his real strength lies in chamber music. He gained experience with Meadows Trio in Dallas, Texas, and as a member of Montana's only chamber ensemble, the Cascade Quartet.

The Southern Methodist University graduate will be accompanied by pianist Lily Chou.

The afternoon program will feature selected works by Bach, Beethoven, and Schumann. Compositions include: Suite Number 2 in D minor for violoncello solo; Fantasy Pieces, Opus 73 for cello and piano; and Sonata Number 3 in A major, Opus 69 for cello and piano.

The public is invited to attend the recital. There is no admission charge for the community event.

ELIZABETH CITY—Waterfowl, raccoons, owls, gamefish, and shorebirds are among the many "living" subjects depicted by artist, Maude "Micky" Harding Blakely in her current exhibit at College of The Albemarle.

The Nags Head artist has made her work more unique by using driftwood rather than canvas for her painting. More than 20 years ago, the Washington, N.C. native began collecting the weathered, salt-bleached pieces that washed ashore along the Dare beaches.

Blakely is a long-time contributor to the Outer Banks Chapter of Ducks Unlimited. In 1979, she was the featured artist at the DU banquet in Martinsville, Virginia.

Her love for animals is apparent in her work. Two raccoons on wood were chosen as examples for oil painting techniques in a Barclay Sheaks book on the subject of oils. Other Blakely painting, both on wood and canvas, are exhibited at Lance's in Nags Head and at J.K.'s in Kill Devil Hills.

The public is invited to view her exhibition at the college from 8 a.m. until 9:30 p.m. each Monday through Thursday, and from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m. on Fridays for the remainder of the month. It is located in the A Building lobby.

Two informational programs explaining state requirements that must be met by employers whose businesses use hazardous materials will be held at College of The Albermarle on Nov. 3 and 4.

The sessions, sponsored by the COA Small Business Center and the N.C. Department of Labor, will feature a department representative who will discuss the provisions of the OSHA Hazard Communication Standard and the North Carolina Hazardous Chemicals Right-to-Know Act.

The first of the cost-free meetings will be held from nine until 11 o'clock, on Tuesday, Nov. 4 in the same location.

The OSHA Hazard Communication Standard is designed to make information about hazardous chemicals available to employees through training programs and data sheets, according to labor department spokesman Mercer Doty. The standard became effective for manufacturers and local government last May.

By May 25, 1987, most businesses involved in agriculture, transportation, wholesale and retail trade, finance, construction, public utilities, insurance, real estate, and services, also must comply with provisions of the standard.

The N.C. Hazardous Chemicals Right-to-Know Act provides information about hazardous chemicals in businesses and government agencies for firefighters and private citizens. Most employers in the state have been subject to the requirements of the act since May 25 of this year.

Materials to help employers comply with requirements will be distributed during the two meetings at the college.

Warning given for children who suffer with high blood pressure

Children can have high blood pressure, although it is adults who are usually warned.

In a pamphlet produced by the American Heart Association called "About High Blood Pressure in Children," parents are provided information about treatments and about how they can help.

Children with hypertension, high blood pressure, have no symptoms. A doctor checking the child's blood pressure at least once a year is the means to discover if a problem exists.

Hypertension in children can be caused by other diseases such as heart and kidney diseases. Called secondary hypertension, this will return to normal if the other disease is successfully treated.

Certain medicines can cause high blood pressure. Also, a small number of children have primary hypertension, the causes of which are unknown.

During childhood blood pressure usually increases as the body increases in size. Also because of growth and development in children, their blood pressure varies to a greater extent than for adults.

Many questions about hypertension in children remain unanswered, but certain tendencies exist. Overweight children usually have higher blood pressure than those who are not. Also children may inherit the tendency from one or both parents who have hypertension. Black Americans more frequently than whites have high blood pressure.

Scientists believe that most children with modest increases in blood pressure will not develop primary hypertension as adults. Those at risk of continuing to have high blood pressure as adults are children who repeatedly have above normal blood pressure and who remain overweight and who come from families with a history of high blood pressure.

Parents can help their child if hypertension is discovered. If the child needs to lose weight, parents can provide support. They can encourage physical activity and discourage inactivity as television watching. Parents can also plan meals and snacks lower in salt.

The child should not be treated as a "sick child;" normal lives can be lead by children and teenagers with high blood pressure.
