Teachers recruit students

Selected teachers in North Carolina's high schools have a new duty this year of recruiting outstanding high school students to the teaching profession.

This student recruitment effort is a part of the new Teacher Enhancement Program funded by the General Assembly and developed by the Department of Public Instruction.

One teacher selected from each high school in the state, along with regional winners in the state Teacher of the Year competition, will work toward improving the image of the teaching profession; provide information about the teaching profession; and identify and attract talented high school students, especially minority students, into the teaching profession.

Teacher recruiter from the Perquimans County school system is Lynda Perry.

State Superintendent Craig Phillips said he was "pleased that some of the very best North Carolina teachers had joined the effort to recruit more good teachers into the profession."

These new teacher recruiters may assist in identifying possible candidates to receive scholarship loans; prepare presentations on the teaching profession for student clubs and parent-teacher groups; and plan career day activities.

They will work with the regional Teachers of the Year or finalists in this program to promote teaching as a career. The regional teacher recruiters are: Region 1-Dianne W. Minton, Bath High School; Region 2-Timothy Rickman, Northwoods Elementary School, Jacksonville; Region 3-Beverly L. Hine, Sherwood Githens Junior High School, Durham; Region 5-Kathy Ingram, Northwood School, Pittsboro; Region 6-Donna Hammrick, Jefferson Elementary, Shelby; Region 7-Linda Cloninger, W.A. Murray Elementary School, Hickory; and Region 8-Ann D. Melton, Waynesville.

INSIGHT INTO EYESIGHT

Dr. A.F. Downum
OPTOMETRIST
LENSES: PLUS AND MINUS

A hyperopic (farsighted) eye, where the eyeball is too short, has a refractive power that is less than that of a normal eye. The light rays don't focus until they've fallen behind the retina. This condition requires a convex lens (thicker at the center, thinner at the edges) to bring the focus point forward, so it lands on the retina. This is also called a PLUS lens because it makes the total refractive power of the eye stronger, like a magnifying glass. A presbyopic eye also requires a plus lens, which is often prescribed in the form of bifocals.

In the case of myopia (nearsightedness), where the eyeball is too long, the total refractive power of the eye is greater than is required for an eye of normal length. A concave lens (thinner at the edges, thicker in the center) is used to correct this condition. It is also called a MINUS lens because it causes the light rays to diverge or bend outward, in effect weakening the total refraction.
