Council votes no to police proposal

The Hertford Town Council voted Monday evening to deny the Town of Winfall's request for police protection.

Members of the Hertford Town Council voted unanimously to deny the request stating they didn't feel the Hertford Police Department could provide adequate service at the present time to the citizens of both communities.

Councilman Eric Haste stated at Monday's meeting that he didn't feel based on experiences over the past year or two that the Hertford Police Department could obtain and keep enough qualified police officers to provide both towns with adequate services which are necessary.

Haste added that he felt that the council should continue to do everything possible to promote co-operation between the two towns, including assisting the Town of Winfall with all police matters until they can make other arrangements.

Members of the Hertford Town Council also expressed feelings that they are not saying they will never again consider the possibility of providing police protection for the citizens of Winfall. The council just feels that at the present time taking on the added burden of providing Winfall with police protection would not be a wise decision.

The council feels that if the situation changes in the future they would certainly reconsider the issue.

The Winfall Town Council will now be forced to seek an alternative source of protection.

In other action taken by the board at Monday's meeting four resolutions were passed concerning the waste treatment improvement project. The resolutions included a loan resolution, equal opportunity agreement, an assurance agreement, and an operating budget for the waste treatment improvement project of $14,001.00.

The council also approved a contract between Dail Harris and the Town of Hertford for the upkeep of the town's two cemeteries at a cost of $13,525.00 for 12 months.

There being no further business the meeting was adjourned.

ECSU announces new development plan

Elizabeth City State University has developed a new academic development program which according to school officials has gotten off on the right foot.

During a news conference last Thursday at ECSU, Chancellor Jimmy Jenkins announced that 97 students from high schools in the 16 county Albemarle area including students from Perquimans County have elected to take part in an incentive scholarship program which will begin with the 1987-1988 school year if funding for the program is approved. Jenkins also stated that as many as 100 more students may be accepted for the program which offers students scholarships of up to $12,000.00 over their four year college enrollment.

Students in Northeastern North Carolina who are in the top half of their graduating class and meet other admissions requirements are considered eligible for the scholarship program. Guidance counselors in area schools, along with pastors from local churches are being asked to provide local students with information on the program.

The scholarship program will only make up on facet of the development program according to Jenkins.

"The scholarships are only one component of the new program," said Jenkins. "We don't want people to forget about the other components."

In January of this year, University of North Carolina President, C.D. Spangler announced the new program.

Facets of the program revealed by Spangler included: review and evaluation of all academic programs at ECSU, evaluation of the teacher education programs, and review of the management of the university with regard to specialized areas such as financial aid, counseling, and others.

A funding request sent to the general assembly earlier this year by the university system seeks funding for 150 to 250 new scholarships a year for new students as well as transfer students who come to ECSU and meet the established criterion.

ECSU school officials feel that funding for the program will be approved, and are hoping with the new funding that as many as 1000 new scholarships may become available over the next several years.

As a result of the new scholarship program at the university the quality of students is greatly improving according to school officials. The average SAT score at ECSU currently is 623 which is up from 612 in 1985.

With the new academic development program Jenkins is hopeful that the average SAT score will go up as much as 130 points in the new few years.
