Senior citizens urged to look out for solicitors

Please be alert and beware of solicitations by representatives of so-called "Advertising Associates," i.e., "Community Associates" or "Senior adult Services" who solicit your participation in distributing Senior Citizen Folders. These individuals are not representatives of AARP. We have on file a number of complaints from medical professionals concerning this type of activity. Although the representatives of the Advertising Associates may solicit involvement and promise to promote the local chapter at no cost to the chapter - and even request you to sign a "contract" to distribute folders - the medical professionals and firms who advertise on the folders have been charged substantial fees by those individuals who have represented themselves as being "associated with AARP" and have been referred by the "local Chapter President." Some chapter presidents have been asked to provide chapter stationery to be used for a letter of introduction.

Please be aware of anyone seeking to involve your chapter in any kind of activity which may be misconstrued or misrepresentative of AARP. I urge you to inform your local consumer affairs office, medical and professional associations, and this office if you are contacted by such persons. Please do not hesitate to call the AARP Area III Office at (703) 739-9220 if you wish to have further information or assistance on such matters.

October is co-op month

America's family farmers make up the most efficient system of food production in the world today. This tiny minority of our population not only feeds the nation but also helps feed the world.

This efficient food production system could not exist without the support of farmer cooperatives to provide us with dependable sources of supplies, credit and markets.

What do cooperatives—many of them located in rural areas—do for the average urban dweller whose only contact with farming is a trip to the local supermarket?

A cooperative is a business voluntarily owned and controlled by its member-patrons and operated for them on a nonprofit basis. Each cooperative member has an equal voice in his organization and shares in benefits according to the amount of his patronage.

Without cooperatives many of the farmers' costs of operating would be higher. These added costs would then be passed on to the consumer.

The existence of strong cooperatives help small businesses survive and succeed. Many small farmers probably could not survive without such organizations.

As community-oriented institutions, cooperatives help build stronger communities and develop leadership. They add jobs and income to communities. Perhaps, more important, they enable users-owners to build self-reliance in business actions and help develop a business leadership that carries over to many other important fields.

In short, cooperatives are a necessary and vital part of our private competitive enterprise system.
