Mrs. Nelson retired July 16th with 44 years of full time service for Roses and 4½ years for Eagles. She has managed the Hertford store for 40½ years.

Chowan Hospital begins blood self-donation program recently

The scenario reads like this: Patient enters hospital for surgery. Patient receives blood transfusion during surgery.

Months later, having recovered from surgery, patient has AIDS symptoms. The deadly virus was contracted through blood transfusions.

Fact or fiction? According to the American Red Cross Blood Services-Tidewater region, the Blood Autologous Program (self-donation) has grown in recent years because of the threat of AIDS during transfusions.

That fear has spurred a nationwide program that Chowan Hospital has recently begun. The American Red Cross Blood Service-Tidewater region, in conjunction with Chowan Hospital, is now offering the Autologous Blood Donation program.

The self-donation program is the process by which you may donate your blood for your own use at a later date. Blood can be stored for 35-42 days.

"Patients request self-donation blood because this is the safest alternative when a blood transfusion is necessary," offered Chowan Hospital Assistant Director Barbara Cale. "The AIDS problem is the major reason for the development of this program," Cale added.

Jennece Carter is a recent participant in the self-donation program. The Edenton resident, who had surgery in June, said she had never heard of the program until her doctor made the suggestion.

"The main reason I used my blood is because of the fear of AIDS," said Carter, who had two pints drawn at Chowan Hospital.

"I felt confident because I know my blood is okay," added Carter, who recommends the program.

The Red Cross Mobile Autologous Unit will be at Chowan Hospital every Tuesday from 9:30-11 a.m.

After the blood is drawn, it is processed in Norfolk, then returned to Edenton for the patient's surgery at Chowan Hospital, or to an out-of-town hospital.
