VA employee honored for outstanding work with vietnam veterans

Raymond M. Scurfield, D.S.W., has been named winner of the Veterans Administration's Olin E. Teague Award for his outstanding work in the psychological rehabilitation of veterans with combat-related post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD).

Currently director of the Post-Traumatic Stress Treatment Program at the American Lake VA Medical Center in Tacoma, Wash., Scurfield has been involved in the care of psychologically war-injured veterans for 17 years. He is nationally recognized for his clinical and research expertise, and leadership in the study and treatment of PTSD.

The Teague Award is awarded to a VA employee, or employees working as a team, whose achievements have been of special benefit to veterans with service-connected problems. The award honors the late U. S. Representative from Texas who, as chairman of the House Committee on Veterans Affairs for 18 years, was an advocate of disabled veterans.

Scurfield served as a captain in the U. S. Army Medical Service Corps in Vietnam where he was a psychiatric social worker and executive officer at the 8th Field Hospital in Nha Trang.

He began his VA career as a social worker at the Brentwood VA Medical Center (Los Angeles) and co-organized the establishment of the first Substance Abuse Program at that hospital where he again observed the psychological problems of returning Vietnam veterans. He became chief of the Vietnam Veterans' Resocialization Unit, and developed and supervised the Veterans-In-Prison Program within the Los Angeles County Jail.

In 1982, Scurfield was named the first national associate director for clinical services of the VA's Readjustment Counseling Service, which oversees the agency's network of Vietnam Veteran Outreach Centers. In this position, Scurfield was responsible for the formulation, planning and implementation of psychological rehabilitation services throughout the Vet Center program. He was instrumental in the development of the proposal for the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study, the largest of its kind to examine the problems of Vietnam veterans.

In 1985, Scurfield became the first director of the Post-Traumatic Stress Treatment Program at the American Lake VA Medical Center, a state-of-the-art rehabilitative treatment program.

The program has been highly praised by veterans, family members, veterans service organizations and federal, state and private sector officials. A principal and co-principal investigator on several research projects, he currently is conducting an ongoing follow-up study of graduates of the American Lake program.

Scurfield holds a clinical faculty appointment at the University of Washington School of Social Work, and also has been a lecturer at the University of Hawaii, Hilo, and the University of Southern California.

A graduate of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., Scurfield earned an M.S.W. and a D.S.W. from the University of Southern California, Los Angeles.

Katherine Hepburn has been nominated for 11 Academy Awards, more than any other actor.
