Board of education reviews pay supplements

By GINGER LIVINGSTON wan County Bureau Chief

The Perquimans County Board of Education will examine its supplemental pay schedules in the coming weeks.

The board asked School Superintendent Randall Henion to prepare a listing of employee supplements so they can study the equity of the school's pay system. They asked for this information after the system's child nutrition staff and the business education office personnel asked to be included in the system's supplement program.

Henion said child nutrition and office personnel were the only two groups of school system employees not receiving supplement pay. The proposal given to the board would pay the system's 14 education office staff employees a supplement of $300 each. The child nutrition program will give the system's 24 assistant workers a $100 supplement, the four managers and one warehouse worker a $200 supplement and the program's director a $500 supplement. only two groups of school system

Board member Ben Hobbs expressed reservations about adopting the new supplements.

"It's something that once it's done, it's done," he said, pointing out the system could not give a supplement one year and take it away the next. He also pointed out that once other groups hear about the new supplements they may want their supplements

Board member Wallace Nelson agreed, noting that teacher assistants only received a $50 supplement.

Some board members asked what scale the system followed when deciding supplement sums. Hobbs said under the system's current supplement plan a tea-cher only received $50 more than a secretary. Assistant School Superintendent J. Cameron Boyce said that was not true because teachers had the chance to participate in a career development plan that could increase their salaries by several thousand dol-

The board decided to grant the supplements but wanted them tied to a career development plan. They also decided to postpone the supplements until the 1993-94 school year. The original proposal would have made the supplements available this May.

In other business:

Henion updated the board on the system's special order of consent for Perquimans County Central Grammar School. Henion said if construction on the school's wastewater treatment facility began June 1 and was fin-ished by Sept. 1, the system would not violate the school's special order of consent.

The board accepted the 1991-92 audit of the system.

 The board also honored the Perquimans Middle School Girls Basketball Team for a 16-0 sea-son. The team lost no games during regular season and tour-nament play.

Stormy weather

A winter storm dumped very little snow on Perquimans County this past weekend, but brought high winds that uprooted trees, destroyed buildings and caused power outages throughout the Albemarle area. Some county residents were without electricity for only a couple of hours, other for a couple of days. The storm ripped down the fence at the county's recycling center on Center Hill Highway. (Photo by Susan Harris)

Hundreds of thousands of pounds of trash are usually collected during these annual cleanups. Much of the trash collected, such as paper, ass, aluminum and plastic, is recycled.

The Durants Neck community, spearheaded by the Ruritans, has already done a massive cleanup on Boat Ramp Road. Volunteers, assisted by the county and N.C. Department of Transportation, spent two days clearing an unauthorized dump site on the road. Unfortunately, someone chose to dump more trash on the site recently, but efforts to enforce the unauthorized dumping are being stepped up.

pnone-a-thon Cancer Society plans annual Perquimans County residents should be prepared to answer their phones on Monday, March 22 and Tuesday, March 23 right after suppertime. On those nights, volunteers with the Pernights, volunteers with the Per-quimans County Chapter of the American Cancer Society will be "dialing for dollars."

Each year the Cancer Society nsors a phone-a-thon to allow unty residents to pledge support. Funds received are used for research, education and to financially assist local residents who have special needs because they Perquimans County has gen-erously supported the Cancer Society in the past, according to local president Kay Winslow.

"Each year we have increased the donation our county has made to fight a disease that has touched the lives of everyone, from a child with leukemia to an elderly person with lung cancer, Winslow said.

The Cancer Society has raised funds with pancake and sausage meals, the phone-a-thon and other activities.

Winslow recently earned a Volunteer Award for her work with the Cancer Society, and the Perquimans County Chapter received the Pace Award for educating the public about cancer.

One thing that bothers local Cancer Society members is groups who raise money by insinuating that they are asso-ciated with the American Cancer Society, when in fact they are not. Make sure when you pledge or donate that you are speaking with a representative of the American Cancer Society.
