Farm-City banquet

The annual Perquimans Farm-City Banquet has been scheduled for Jan. 14 in the Perquimans High School cafeteria at 7 p.m. Historically, Farm-City Week and associated events have been held to promote understanding between rural and nonrural citizens across North Carolina. In Perquimans County, we take this time to celebrate the accomplishments of our farmers, enjoy the fellowship, and learn more about the world in which we live. The guest speaker this year will be Paul Lilly, retired soils specialist with the N.C. Cooperative Extension Service. Lilly is known for his knowledge of the history and development of northeastern North Carolina. The Natural Resources Conservation Service will present its Conservation Farm Family of the Year award. County corn, wheat and soybean yield awards will also be presented. A new award this year will recognize selected farm families for their strides in the area of Integrated Pest Management.

The banquet will begin with a meal sponsored by various agribusinesses in the county. To receive your complimentary ticket, come by the Perquimans County Extension Center by 5 p.m. on Jan. 6
