THE OPTIMIST.

He is the finest fellow in the bunch. Without him the clouds would obscure the sun here and the town should give and the world's work would be them a warm greeting. The drudgery. He is the life and program for the day is an exlight of the community and cellent one, and aside from our power, miscellaneous tools, appliduty as hosts to our neighbors, gives hope to the downhearted and courage to the timid and the weak.

He may not always be wise. from the discussion. He is often mistaken, but bless his sunny soul, he is worth a cart load of croakers whose doleful prophecies come true. trim he will stir his crowd as confirmation to be secured by suit-He looks on the bright side no other man in North Carolina can stir people. And beand never sees the dark. The reason for this is that he has cause the Lord has endowed no taste for the doleful. His him with this superior gift we hope the people of North Caroheart is free from bitterness lina will put him in the senate and he never sours on the where he can be of most service world.

With the other man it is difto the State. ferent. He has a grouch and the welfare of the community has no place in all histhoughts. He rejoices in the failure of a public enterprise because it affords him the opportunity to say "I told you so." He is silent when his prophecies fail but flaps his rusty wings and crows like thunder when they come true.

A town is grievously afflicted which has a few of these old curmudgeons who are forever growling. They cast suspicion on the motives of their neighbors and find joy in obstructing every movement of progress that is proposed. They are miserable themselves and miserv loves company.

On the other hand, the best asset of any town are the bright spirits who see the rainbow instead of the cloud. The men who do things are bound to be optimistic. They must have faith in the future of a community or they might as well go back and sit down.
