and staff. Are they available to answer questions, hear complaints or discuss problems?

Don't notify the facility in advance that you are coming — this will give you a chance to view everyday operations as they actually occur.

Take a walking tour of the facility and the grounds. Note the cleanliness of the home and whether it complies with Medicare/Medicaid sanitation standards. Check the safety measures taken by the facility such as lighting, sturdiness of chairs, handrails in hallways and bathrooms, etc. One particular measure to note is whether the home meets Federal day at the High Point Memorial Hospital. Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Kingdom Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses, Jamestown. Burial will be in Piedmont Memorial Gardens. Moore Funeral Home was in charge of the arrangements.

and/or state fire safety codes such as clearly marked and unobstructed exits.

Time your visit during a meal so that you can see how the residents are fed. Talk with the dietician at the facility. Note whether the residents are eating hot, nutritious meals and whether the food is properly prepared according to a doctor's specifications (if any).

Find out what type of activity programs are offered by the facility such as church services, transportation to and from town for shopping trips, etc.

Talk to the patients. Check their alertness, freedom to communicate, happiness, etc.

Finally, don't be pressured into making a snap decision as to which facility best suits your needs. Consider carefully the advantages and disadvantages of each home and select one accordingly.

Nursing homes are becoming more and more in demand across the United States as well as in North Carolina. One reason for this is that the general population is taking more interest in the care of senior citizens. Another reason, says Phillips, is "that these homes, especially skilled nursing homes, are starting to take care of more short term patients so that these patients won't
