 wrong on the homefront also. With five children, appliances breaking down, with two dogs who aren't always as nice as they should be, frantic parents trying to reach a daughter, committee meetings, and other little inconveniences of a household, he can't help but notice it. But my problems are minor to his. A native of Fayetteville, N.C., Mrs. Miller attributes her deep tolerance and ability to adjust to changing situations to her military upbringing. Her father was an officer in the Army. After attending Fayetteville's E.E. Smith High School, she attended Fisk University and A&T State University. She received her M.Ed. from Tennessee State University.

"I have been a part of the working world and enjoyed my teaching experience."

But I also enjoy being a homemaker and involving myself in community work." Mrs. Miller, who is a member of over 30 different organizations, feels compelled to assist her husband in college friend-raising efforts.

"Being the wife of any college president means that you will have to attend many functions, address numerous groups, and sponsor many socials for public relations purposes. You find yourself being very self-conscious about whatever you do or say." The Millers have two sons away in college, two in Fisk University and one in elementary school.

"I thought that with the children away in school, I would have more time to myself and even considered seeking employment. However, my community and church involvement are also time consuming," she stated.

Her pet concerns include Headstart, the Voluntary Action Council, trusteeship on the L. Richardson Hospital Board, and the Greensboro P.T.A. Council.

"Here again, liberation is doing what pleases me. Indeed women should be able to compete for the best jobs and equal pay on the basis of their qualifications. I am all for the Equal Rights Amendment and feel that more women should voice their support of it."

She said, "Oh yes, as a college student I had big plans of being a success and of making a name for myself."

There are many advantages of being in her position she admits which outweigh the disadvantages. She enjoys people and therefore, she looks forward to traveling with Dr. Miller on many of his trips during the year. Another advantage is her involvement with the young women of Bennett College. "People are so quick to pass judgement on today's youth. But they are searching for their place in a fast moving society which has no pity on anyone. They have many anxieties and frustrations. We have some beautiful and talented young women on campus," she stated.

"Our home is a haven for many students in distress who sometimes only want the comfort of a woman's arm or to share a few personal problems with someone who has time to listen. My husband was recently moved when four students serenaded him on his birthday from the front porch."

"It is necessary to weigh each student's problem in light of her own situation. It takes patience even though you might be late for an important appointment," she said.

Effie Miller has rightfully earned the reputation of being a rebel because of her determination to fight for change, especially on those boards or committees where she is the only black female member.

"It infuriates me to see
