

SADIE'S CORNER

(Tips To The Ladies)

During a luncheon with a group of wives the topic was coping with their husbands during the football season. One wife was furious and refused to go along with the hours long of him watching the games and they kept switching the channels.

One wife said she stood in front of the set and was rudely pushed aside and gave up the issue.

One wife said she flatly put her foot down and refused to have her husband drinking beer and caring on about a game in that manner in front of the children.

One wife said that after serving her husband the six beer she decided to become the topless waitress and the shock immediately made her husband get his own beers.

After hearing all of their gripes they wanted to know how Sadie would handle this issue. Here are the hints that I gave to this group of wives in hopes that it would make the football season a happy one for the entire household. The first thing to do is to get a few six packs of his favorite beer, pack in a bucket with ice and sit it next to his chair in front of the television set. Be sure that there are plenty of cigarettes and a large ash tray at his reach. Clear out the room by giving the children some toys in their room or putting them out to play. Shut the door so that unbecoming language can not be heard by the little ears. Every half hour or forty five minutes check and see if he would like something to snack on and keep the tray filled with goodies. The wife should get her a good book to read, or go for a ride with the children, or shopping, or ironing or any chore that she needs to catch up on. This time also gives the wife a few hours to herself. If there are two television sets in the house then the rest of the family can still watch their choice of shows. The main point I am trying to get the wives to understand is that if they will keep their husbands content and happy at home then they will not have to worry about them seeking happiness elsewhere. One of the main duties of a wife is to keep her husband content and griping about him watching his sports on television at his own home is one sure way to push him in the street or into some other house. I also suggest to wives to get interested in sports and learn to enjoy the games with their husbands.

Albert A. Campbell, Publisher
The Tribunal Aid
P. O. Box 921
High Point, North Carolina 27261

Dear Mr. Campbell:

Eight years after his life was taken by a senseless, tragic act of violence, Martin Luther King remains one of America's greatest spiritual and moral leaders. Far from fading, his memory is growing stronger every day. Indeed, his wisdom, his courage, and his vision endure as a monument for not just Blacks but all Americans.

It is particularly fitting that The Tribunal Aid is commemorating Dr. King's birth this year for this year Americans will celebrate the nation's Bicentennial. And in this celebration we should not focus solely upon the events of the past but upon the beliefs and commitments to beliefs that caused those events to take place.

And clearly such a focus will reveal the enormous contribution Martin Luther King has made to his country. He was a great man who came to us in a greatly troubled time. And we are a better country for it.

Sincerely,

Edward W. Brooke
