

Health For All

BUILDING A NEW LIFE

When a person has been told that he has tuberculosis, he faces more than a battle with a dangerous disease. The treatment of tuberculosis is a long, slow affair, usually accomplished in a tuberculosis sanatorium or hospital.

Both the patient and his family must realize that the patient may have to make a substantial change in his way of living when hospital treatment has been completed. For example, if he has followed a strenuous athletic life or has done heavy manual work, he must find a way to substitute less exacting forms of recreation and occupation after recovery. His problem is how to make this change in such a way as to resume the support of his family instead of becoming dependent on them or on the community.

In a modern tuberculosis hospital, the patient learns how to care for his health in such a way as to minimize risks of a new outbreak of his disease. Because of this kind of instruction expectancies have proved a good employment risk in business and industry. The production records of the war years emphasized what many employers had discovered . . . that a former patient placed in a suitable job makes a highly satisfactory employee.

Progressive TB hospitals help patients to take stock of their educational and job assets and to plan and prepare for a new life which does not invite relapse. Under medical direction, occupational therapists, social workers, counselors and teachers plan the practical phases of training for future employment.

Every state department of education maintains a vocational rehabilitation program which provides suitable vocational training and placement for the recovered TB patient, as for other handicapped persons. Often this service is begun in the hospital under medical supervision and completed after the patient has returned to his home.

The result of this growing policy is an improved outlook for the patient who once faced the threats not only of a disease with the possibility of fatal outcome but the hazard of life-long invalidism and dependence on others. Today, for the patient whose disease has been found in time and who is willing to follow the doctor's advice, there is an excellent prospect for successful employment and full enjoyment of his new way of life.

WILLIAMS FORFEITS PRIVILEGES; NO LONGER TRUSTY

Take a dash of giggle-water and an afternoon off from the city jail. Throw in an immovable object and shake well. The result would be the undoing of Superman, which Roma Fletcher, Williams has discovered he isn't.

Williams gives as his address as 1334 Ashe street, but he hasn't lived there for some time. On July 14 he began a six-month residence at the city jail on charges of assault with a deadly weapon.

But Williams became a trusty at the jail, and with his elevation to that rank came the privilege of going home one afternoon a week to get clean clothes and other necessary items. Monday was Williams' afternoon off, but he couldn't be bothered with necessary items.

A drink of liquor apparently began Williams' immediate downfall. With the stomach-warming concoction under his belt, he allegedly took a car belonging to Tommy Austin, 806 Ashe street. He went for a joy ride, police said, that lasted only three blocks.

At 259 Whittington street, Williams drove the car into the front porch of a house said to belong to Naomi Smith. The lads with the badges came and carted Williams back to where he had started.

Tuesday, in Municipal-County court, Williams faced charges of driving an auto while intoxicated and larceny of a car. He still has about four months to serve on the assault with deadly weapon charge.

Besides all that, Williams has definitely lost his privileges as a trusty.
