A School From Which You Never Graduate

One of the world's fastest-growing ministerial societies never "graduates" its ministers. "Christian development never ends and the Christian minister can always advance in ministerial qualifications." These are Jehovah's Witnesses.

For that reason the organization provides a continuous training program of activity for young and old. A featured part of that program is to be a three-day conference of Jehovah's Witnesses scheduled for July 13-15 at the Coliseum. Their spokesman is Mr. Garland McIver, 2112 Belcrest Drive, a minister of Jehovah's Witnesses and the ministry school director for the Central Unit Congregation, 442 East Washington St.

"Since their beginning Jehovah's Witnesses have been a preaching fellowship," McIver said. "The faith of each believing Christian in the organization is tested by his participation in the most important Christian activity-propagation of the faith.

"By plying this method," McIver continued, "during the past ten years the Witnesses have doubled their numbers in North America, multiplied five times in Asia, more than six times in the Pacific Islands, seven times in Europe and Africa, and more than twelve times in the Atlantic Islands and nearly fifteen times in South America.

"As a stimulation to the preaching methods of the Witnesses the Greensboro program carries the theme "Courageous Ministers." This will provide the background for the advanced course planned," McIver said.

"The program is really an extension of and a refresher for the regular training program conducted in all congregations of Jehovah's Witness," McIver explained. "One of the requirements for every Christian that is set forth in the Bible is that he be 'apt to teach,'" he said.

"That means he must not only be well grounded in the Bible but he must be acquainted with the techniques of preaching. Jesus took the apostles with him on his tour of Galilee, where they could observe his teaching. Then he sent them out by twos and later, after training others, sent out seventy others by twos.

"Jesus told his disciples, 'Freely you have received, give freely.' and Jehovah's Witnesses believe that this applies to their Christian knowledge as much as to anything else. Jesus made the statement when he was sending his followers out to preach."

According to McIver, Jehovah's Witnesses conduct a regular schedule of five weekly classes in all their congregations. Their object is to develop each believer into a preacher. Two classes are conducted as advanced studies of the Bible, another is to improve speech and speaking ability with practice sermons given by the students enrolled. Another is a ministry-development class, where problems of the ministry are discussed. The fifth meeting is a public sermon on a timely Bible subject.

"After a new student expresses his willingness and dedicates himself to do God's will as Jesus did," McIver said "he is assisted in practical field ministry by being assigned to a mature minister who assists him in developing his preaching ability."

"After features of the regular training program will be covered at the Greensboro convention," McIver said. "However, these meetings at the coliseum will be under the direction of Mr. Sakalos, a special representative of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society sent out from New York."

The Greensboro program scheduled for July 13-15 will draw more than 6,000 people from a 20 state area, according to McIver. In addition, a number of car groups of interested persons are planning to attend the sessions, all of which are open to the public. The meetings are free and no collections will be taken at any time.
