At the conclusion of her lecture she demonstrated on the koto, 13-stringed instrument which has a five-tone scale and dates back to the 12th century.

Bennett College Razes Three Old Buildings

Bennett College this week bade farewell to three old friends—friends who had come to be known and revered by more than three generations of Bennett students.

Smith Cottage, Trigg Cottage and Tobias Cottage—three white frame buildings, which for more than 60 years housed faculty and staff, were razed this week to make room for the new million-dollar science building on which construction has already begun.

The structures, which faced on Macon Street on the West campus, were here when Dr. David D. Jones assumed the presidency of the institution in 1929, and, until this month, had housed two families and six to eight single women each year.

Because of their proximity to dormitories, the cottages attracted scores of students who "just happened to drop in" around meal time, ostensibly to see one of the teachers about a class assignment. They were, in a sense, homes away from home for the hungry and homesick.

Tobia Cottage was named in memory of Miss Blanche Tobias who died while serving as a member of the Bennett faculty. Trigg Cottage was named for former President Frank Trigg and Smith Cottage for Mrs. Nan Goode Smith, a long-time friend of the school.

Cottage residents have now been housed elsewhere, but for them, and for scores of returning alumnae, the relentless bulldozer that destroyed these old friends could never destroy the pleasant thoughts of them that will live forever in their memories.
