Bennett Homemaking Theme "The Family: a Quest for Stability"

An exploration of ways whereby the family may be reoriented to assume its rightful role in the development of society was made during the 41st annual Homemaking Institute at Bennett College last week.

With the theme: "The Family: A Quest for Stability," the institute opened on Sunday with an address by Rabbi Bernard Speilman of the local Beth David Synagogue, who said that "there is no greater security than having knowledge of your own worth and that of your fellow humans."

Speaking on "The Family—A Source of Strength," Rabbi Speilman described the family as a protective laboratory in which a child may experiment without running the risk of social isolation. He said that the family has been the instrument through which the Jew has made his true contribution to society.

Panelists representing education, social work and the clergy on Monday addressed themselves to "The Family—Changes and Challenges" and agreed, for the most part, that the family is failing to fulfill its true role in society.

Panelists representing education, social work and the clergy on Monday addressed themselves to "The Family—Changes and Challenges" and agreed, for the most part, that the family is failing to fulfill its true role in society.

Dr. Gwendolyn Newkirk, chairman of the department of home economics at North Carolina College at Durham, listed a number of changes that have taken place in the family, among them the fact that families are not as large as they once were, are more mobile, have younger parents and are relieved of the necessity of working as a unit to produce needed things.

Van S. Allen, deputy director of the Economic Opportunity Council of Guilford County, saw family disorganization responsible for much of juvenile delinquency and crime, with the Negro family hit hardest by the changes in living conditions and patterns and raised the question: "What kinds of values must we set for our children?"

Dr. Sarah T. Morrow, associate director of the Guilford County Health Department, stressed the importance of family health and cited how chronic illness of one member of the family may affect all the others. She defined health as "the physical, mental, spiritual and social well-being of an individual."

Pointing out that the family is no longer multi-functional, Dr. F. L. Grandison, coordinator of psychology at Bennett, said that the dominant motivation and goals of society actually disrupt the family because the culture lays great stress on material things as a measure of success.

"The salvation of the family," he said, "rests upon its ability to provide a place where one can be accepted in spite of what he is or is not—where one need not have to justify himself. If it cannot do this, then we need another institution to do the job."

The Reverend Cecil Bishop, pastor of Trinity AME Church, said that most of the family problems, at root, are theological. "The ethic of love presents religion with a real challenge," he said. "There must be a recognition of the identity of people other than ourselves."

Attendance Records Broken At CIAA Basketball Tournament

All sort of attendance records were broken at the 22nd Annual CIAA Basketball Tournament held here last week at the Greensboro Coliseum.

The tourney, sold out twonights, Friday and Saturday, drew a paid attendance of nearly 28,000 for the three-day event.

The Saturday night finals had played before sellout crowds for two-straight years, but not in previous history had also the Friday night semi-finals drawn a packed house.

Coliseum officials said more than 1,200 fans were turned away on Friday evening. All seats for the Saturday games had been sold prior to the Friday development. Despite statewide announcements about the ticket situation in newspapers, radio and television on Friday night and early Saturday, hundreds of tourney fans came to Greensboro, but never saw the finals. Those without tickets or who had failed to reserve them were not permitted to enter the Coliseum parking lot.

Observers about the scene said that a few ticket scalpers took advantage of the situation. Reports indicated that $2.50 tickets at tip-off time for the A&T-Howard University finals brought from $16 to $20 each.

A quick check on Monday by officials of the Greensboro Chamber of Commerce revealed that nearly 1,100 motel and hotel rooms had gone to tourney fans. A few hundred more procured accommodations in High Point and Winston-Salem and motored in daily for the game.

Civil Service Exams Announced

The Interagency Board of U. S. Civil Service Examiners for North Carolina, located in Raleigh, N. C., has announced an examination for Helper (All Options) for filling positions in various Federal Agencies in North Carolina. The salary rates are approximately $1.80 to $3.00 per hour and are based on the prevailing rates in the commuting area where the agency is located.

Helpers assist skilled trade workers. Depending on the assignment, the helper may have to work outside or inside, on repair or maintenance, on new installation or construction, or on renovation or alteration. Interested persons should consult Announcement No. AR-07-05 for detailed information and description of the tasks involved in each trade.

All applicants are required to take a written test consisting of following oral directions, eye-hand gross coordination, alignment dexterity, mechanical information.

The examination announcement and application forms are available from the Board of U. S. Civil Service Examiners, Room 236, U. S. Post Office, Greensboro, N. C., and are being accepted by the Interagency Board in Raleigh until further notice.
