U.S. CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS ANNOUNCED

The U. S. Civil Service Commission today announced a nationwide examination which will enable junior college graduates and others with similar qualifications to compete for $94-a-week jobs as Engineering Aids and Science Assistants.

Announcing the examination, CSC Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., said:

"Federal agencies have struggled for years with a growing shortage of professional scientists and engineers. We are seeking to alleviate this shortage by recruiting two-year college graduates who can ease the loads on the professionals.

"At the same time, we are extending solid career opportunities to junior college graduates and others who have the potential to work in close support of scientists and engineers."

He said that Engineering Aids and Science Assistants recruited under the new exam would work closely with professional engineers and scientists in such fields as biology, medicine, engineering, surveying, geodesy, meteorology, drafting, physical science cartography, mathematics, electronics, and industrial engineering.

Chairman Macy urged students who are completing their second year of college to continue their education if at all possible. "However," he said, "if you are seeking full-time employment at the end of this school year, the Engineering Aid and Science Assistant examination may provide you the opportunity for challenging work in one of many technical fields."

Candidates applying for Federal jobs under the new examination will not be required to take a written test.

Those who have completed, or are in the process of completing, their second year of college must have at least 24 semester hours in any combination of engineering, science, technology, or mathematics except commercial or financial mathematics.

Others who have had two years of technical experience in engineering or in the agricultural, biological, medical, or physical sciences, or in allied fields of work which provided knowledge of the equipment, methods, and practices used in the appropriate fields, also may qualify. A Two-year combination of the required experience and education is also acceptable.

Copies of the announcement (No. 409), which contains all essential filing information and application forms may be obtained from the Civil Service Board, Room 236, Main Post Office, Greensboro, N. C., or from any Interagency Board of U. S. Civil Service Examiners.

THE BLOODMOBILE IS COMING!

Mr. and Mrs. Blue of Hoke County are pictured here with three of their six children. Two teenagers and a seven-year old are living with a relative while their parents are undergoing treatment. Standing are Mrs. Lora Tinder (L), Social worker at the N. C. Sanatorium at McCain, and Mrs. C. Gordon Maddrey of Raleigh, 1966 State Christmas Seal Chairman.

BLUES HIT BY THE BLUES WHEN TB STRUCK

"We're feeling better about the whole thing now," Mrs. Blue said. "Despite the fact that my husband is still very depressed at times, I'm beginning to believe that some good can come out of everything if we look hard enough to find it." This is the way Mrs. Blue summed up her feelings about their stay in the sanatorium to Mrs. C. Gordon Maddrey, 1966 Christmas Seal Chairman.

It all started when Mr. Blue, a farm laborer, came down with a "cold" in October of 1965. But this cold was different. It seemed to hang on and on. In fact, instead of getting over it, as it appeared at times he was it grew progressively worse. It was no ordinary cold.

"Blues Hit by the Blues When TB Struck" was written by Mrs. Velma T. Joyner, Publications Editor of the North Carolina Tuberculosis Association.
