Rev. Cecil Bishop To Head Rights Unit

The Rev. Cecil Bishop, pastor of Trinity A.M.E. Zion Church, was elected chairman of the Greensboro Human Relations Commission Tuesday.

Bishop, a member of the commission for one year, was elected unanimously at a special organizational meeting at the public library Tuesday afternoon. He succeeds Joseph L. Berry, whose term on the commission expired Tuesday.

Bishop is also chairman of the commission's recently appointed committee seeking to relieve tension which might lead to civil disorder in Greensboro. He expressed his reluctance to accept the chairmanship because of his work with the committee.

In accepting the position, Bishop noted that "there will be many problems of complexity to deal with in the days ahead." He pledged his best efforts to solve those problems.

Elected vice chairman was Mike Fleming.

The commission also welcomed three new members: attorney Henry Isaacson, insurance man Herbert Reese, and investment consultant Joseph Wernick. They fill vacancies left by Berry, Mrs. Ruth Spruill, and Jim Culberson, Jr.

The board voted to continue the work of the special committee headed by Bishop and instructed the committee to prepare a suggestion as to whether it should be made permanent.

The next session of the commission was set for Sept. 6 at 2 p. m. in the City Council chamber of the Municipal Building.
