A&T Lyceum Series To Start October 10

Concerts by the Chicago Little Symphony Orchestra and by pianist John Garvey, a native North Carolinian, will highlight the annual Lyceum Series at A&T State University.

Now in its seventh national tour, the orchestra, conducted by Thor Johnson, will perform at A&T next January 14. The group has been called one of America's finest chamber orchestras.

Garvey, who will perform at least seven concerts on his return to the Tar Heel State, will play at A&T next March 6.

The series will get underway October 9 with a concert by the American Choreographers Dance Company, directed by Richard Nicholas. Other presentations will be the musical Lost In The Stars, November 13; Simon Estes, bass-baritone, December 6; the Musical Arts Quintet, March 20; and the "Blue" Mitchell Jazz Quintet, May 2.

Student Leadership Outlined At A&T's 1st Annual Retreat

Westfield, N. C. — The leadership of students must be observed, judged and understood as a whole or it will be poorly observed and misunderstood.

That was the advice given seventy of A&T State University's student leaders at a pre-school retreat here last Tuesday.

The speaker, Dr. Malvin E. Moore, dean of Fayetteville State College, gave the keynote address at the opening session of the two-day meeting held at Camp Vade Mecum.

He said that many educators think they can reach a midpoint between autocracy and democracy and that they can give lip service to freedom of expression and keep students in a sort of medieval bondage.

"Student leadership," said Dr. Moore, "should be observed in relation to student leadership at all colleges and universities with whom contacts have been made by administrators, teachers, students and laymen."

Dr. Moore said that in order to reach an agreement on what students should do concerning their moral obligations, they have to first examine obligations to the university and to themselves.

Coordinator of the retreat was Dr. Jesse E. Marshall, A&T's dean of Student Affairs.

Others taking part in the program included Marsh Campbell, president of the Student Government Association; Miss Patricia Mobley, "Miss A&T"; Dr. Glenn F. Rankin, dean of Academic Affairs; Dr. Albert W. Spruill, Dr. Gloria Scott and Albert Smith, all of the College Family.
