Maryland State Downs A&T 25 To 14

By Richard E. Moore

Maryland State piled up 322 yards rushing and scored twice in each half to down fired-up A&T State University, 25-14 before 10,000 Aggie Homecoming fans here Saturday afternoon.

The Hawks won the duel of powerful offenses on the strength of a 93-yard run by freshman quarterback Willie Belton and a 68-yard touchdown screen pass from senior quarterback Jim Duncan to fullback Roy Kirksey.

The underdog Aggies, who have yet to win a game this season, matched the Hawks for more than three quarters, closing the gap to 19-14 midway the third period on a brilliant 79-yard touchdown run by the Aggies' Willie Pearson.

But Moses Benson's five-yard touchdown run for the Hawks, with 13:06 left in the game sewed up the win for Maryland State, now 2-1 in CIAA play. A&T is 0-3 for the season, the Aggies having tied Johnson C. Smith.

Maryland State's first touchdown came on a three-yard run by Duncan with 31 seconds left in the first period. The Hawks had nailed A&T's kicker Warren Frye on the Aggies' 6-yard line to set up the touchdown. Ervin Williams' kick was wide and the Hawks led, 6-0.

The Hawks stretched their margin to 13-0 with 2:10 remaining in the half when Belton took a short pitchout from Dun-

Nutrition Professor Says Field Is Open For Men And Women

DURHAM, N. C. — United States astronauts on recent long space flights ate meals which cost $634 each.

Edward Ramsey, Jr., a new faculty member in North Carolina College's Department of Home Economics, says that the specially packaged foods for the astronauts cost that much to develop and prepare. The nutrition expert cited the figure to illustrate the new frontiers of food preparation and research.

"The field is a rewarding one in remuneration and in personal satisfaction," Ramsey said. He said he is engaged in an effort to attract more students to the field.

Although in most areas, nutrition is normally studied by women students, Ramsey does not feel there will be any difficulty attracting men to the profession. For one thing, he said, there is the attraction of direct commissions in the armed services.

Food scientists, certified by the American Dietetic Association, can be commissioned directly as second lieutenants. Food in the armed services is no longer solely the province of the mess sergeants, he said.

The Air Force, particularly, has changed the image of the men responsible for food preparation. "The wash-outs used to be assigned to the quartermaster corps as cooks," he said. The space age has changed things.

The new assistant professor's father is a nutrition expert at Tuskegee Institute. The son studied under his father as an undergraduate and as a candidate for his Master of Science degree, so that nutrition has always been a man's field to him.

Food science is full of opportunity, Ramsey said. He described some of the recent discoveries in the field.

"Within the past three weeks, a process for making proteins from petroleum has been discovered. A strain of bacteria has been bred which feeds on the petroleum and converts it into essential proteins," he said.

"Until recently, wheat has lacked some of the essential proteins. New strains have been developed which have all of the necessary amino acids," Ramsey noted.

Other recent developments include the development of the first synthetic carbohydrates and the discovery of a flavor agent which makes the various non-animal proteins taste like meat, he said.

"The soy-bean proteins can be spun out in fibers, just like textiles, to duplicate the texture of any meat. Then a wild yeast, which as a meaty flavor, can be added, and you have a product which looks, feels, and tastes like meat, with all the food values of meat, but really isn't meat at all."

Synthetic proteins and other foods are part of the United States' concerted effort to develop answers to the world's pressing food problems, but other developments can change and are changing the eating habits of the nation's affluent citizens.

"I predict that soon you will be able to go to the store and buy a six-pack of breakfast, lunch and dinner," Ramsey said. He said the new packaging processes have made food easier to store, prepare and served.

"I studied under a man at Michigan State University who helped to develop the processes by which such foods as beef
