Veterans Administration News

About 800 servicemen are now receiving Veterans Administration vocational rehabilitation while still in military hospitals, W. R. Phillips, Manager of the Winston-Salem VA Regional Office, said today.

About 15,000 hospitalized servicemen have filed applications for vocational rehabilitation. More than a third have started the process of selecting a program while still in the hospital.

Phillips called this program a bridge between the hospital bed and training opportunities.

VA counseling helps the veteran accept his disability and concentrate on his strengths rather than his limitations. He is helped to assess his capacities, aptitudes, abilities, and interests as a planning step to a new career.

This type of planning helps him select the occupation that best suits his personality and one in which he has the best chance for successful achievement.

The work in military hospitals, Phillips said, is an extension of an "outreach" program through which the seriously disabled are sought out by VA and motivated as early as possible.

Since 1943, VA has rehabilitated about 720,000 disabled veterans. Up to 48 months of training are provided and more can be authorized if necessary.

The full cost of tuition, books and supplies is provided by VA, and a subsistence allowance ranging from $110 to $175 per month, depending on the number of dependents, is paid in addition to compensation.
