Death Penalty For Robbery Called Cruel and Unusual

Washington, D. C.—The U. S. Supreme Court was asked today to set aside the Alabama death penalty against Edward Boykin, Jr., a Negro charged with committing five robberies.

The execution of a man for robbery is cruel and unusual punishment, argued attorneys of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. (LDF), because: 1) it involves brutal and unnecessary physical and psychological cruelty, 2) is abhorrent to civilized standards, 3) is justified by no rational standards, 4) is a rare and unusual penalty which is 5) applied by juries which are given absolute discretion and 6) insufficient information about the offender.

The LDF brief notes that there have been only 25 executions for robbery in the United States between 1930 and 1965.

Twenty-three of these cases took place in southern states, and 19 of the victims were Negro. In Alabama, the LDF points out, all five persons executed for robbery have been Negro.

The attorneys also argue against "the unfettered discretion of a jury," which was empowered by Alabama law to choose between the penalties of death and imprisonment "arbitrarily, capriciously, for any reason, or no reason" and without instruction by a trial judge, thereby violating due process of law.

Three days after the first appointment of a lawyer by the court, Boykin, an indigent, was arraigned on five separate capital charges. He pleaded guilty to all charges.

The LDF is presently representing, or assisting private attorneys who are representing, more than half of the 400 men on the death rows of America.

The LDF involvement grew from years of experience with death cases in the South where Negroes had received the death penalty for the rape of white women. Of the 400 persons executed for the crime of rape since 1930, 90 per cent have been Negroes; yet this figure alone was not considered proof of racial discrimination in the courts.

The LDF sponsored an extensive sociological survey during the summer of 1965 of 2,500 rape cases in the 11 southern states, involving both white and Negro defendants, to determine objectively and scientifically where any factors other than racial discrimination could account for the high rate of death sentences for the Negroes convicted of raping white women.

Bonded fabrics have won a special place in the lives of N. C. homemakers, observes Miss Dorothy Barrier, extension clothing specialist, NCSU.

Carmichael Speaks at A&T State

Black militant Stokely Carmichael and wife singer Miriam Makeba relax on A&T State University campus prior to his address there this week. Carmichael's talk inaugurated the university's recently formed center for Afro-Asian Studies.

NIXON TO POLARIZE WHITES, SAYS STOKLEY IN A&T SPEECH

Black activist Stokely Carmichael said this week that the election of Richard Nixon to the Presidency is going to "polarize the whites against the blacks."

In an address to more than 3,500 persons at A & T State University, Carmichael said, "I think Richard Nixon is going to polarize whites by using Negroes. He is far more dangerous than anything we have."

Carmichael, the prime minister of the Black Panthers, had been invited to A&T to inaugurate a lecture series of the university's newly formed Afro-American Center.

Asked whom he voted for in the 1968 elections, Carmichael

Samuel Boateng, director of Secondary Education for the Republic of Ghana talks over matters of African affairs with Joanne Phillips, a representative for the Peace Corps Office of Public Affairs. The African educator was making a speaking engagement at Bennett College. Miss Phillips has served a tour of duty with the Corps in Africa.

MR. SAMUEL BOATENG, AN AFRICAN EDUCATOR

An African Educator called education the force that moved African countries from under the control of colonial powers, to a position where the "voices of Africans are heard in world councils."

Samuel Boateng, superintendent of Secondary Education for the Republic of Ghana, told Bennett College students recently that at the beginning of this century "colonial administrators began to take a keen interest in the educational de-
