Peace Comes To A & T Campus; Strike Of Foodworkers Ended On Friday At 6 P. M.

A settlement of the three-day strike of food service workers at A&T State University against ARE-Slater Catering Services, the strikers' employer, was announced Friday afternoon at 6 p.m.

Less than a half hour after the settlement was announced, some of the cafeteria workers reported to work in Murphy Hall to aid in serving an evening meal. Full service in both dining halls is expected to be restored by Saturday morning.

The settlement, called "satisfactory" by representatives of the strikers, was announced by Raymond Davis, regional operations director for Slater, and Phillip J. O'Doherty, district manager.

The representatives of the strikers and the Slater officials had met more than two hours in the basement of Murphy Hall before reaching the agreement.

Both parties would only say that the settlement reached includes salary increases and other fringe benefits.

After being informed of the settlement, Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, president of A&T, issued the following statement:

"My interest all along was in restoring the full operation of the food service as quickly as possible for the benefit of our student body and in the interest of our cafeteria workers. I am extremely pleased that the settlement has been made."

Strike Touched Off

The strike at A&T was touched off last Wednesday morning when approximately 21 cafeteria workers staged a "sit-down" in protest of low wages.

The protest was staged in Brown Hall, the smaller of the University's two cafeterias. When a number of students joined the cafeteria workers, campus security guards were summoned.

Later in the day, the University closed Brown Hall, because of a shortage of workers. Breakfast and lunch were prepared by supervisors in Murphy Hall, the larger cafeteria, but only a few students would enter the dining hall.

Hayes-Taylor YMCA Holds Awards Banquet

The Hayes-Taylor Memorial Branch Y.M.C.A. held its Second Annual Awards and Recognition Banquet on Sunday, March 16, with Attorney Donald L. Hollowell of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Atlanta, Georgia, as guest speaker.

Hollowell told an audience of 175 persons that despite advances in civil rights and economic opportunities, "the requirements of our grandparents were not sufficient for our parents, and ours are insufficient for our children."

But the "American dream is still attainable. The job to be done is too big for either blacks or whites alone," however, it will take "patience, determination, and love," virtues which the Y.M.C.A. can continue to teach and lead the way in a community.

He spoke of the "credibility gap" between recent increase in visible improvements in civil rights and deceptive statistics which hide continued Negro unemployment and under-employment.

The way to overcome this gap, he stated, is not to "burn, baby, burn" but to "learn, baby, learn."

The education and strength of character of Dr. Martin Luther King were cited as an example of one means to implement improvements.

Hollowell, who is a civil rights lawyer and has handled major civil rights cases for the N.A.A.C.P., was introduced by State Representative Henry E. Frye.

Awards were presented to members of the Men's Club who were part of the original Chauffeurs' Club at its founding in 1939. These men were front runners in securing funds for the building at its present site.

Dr. B. W. Barnes and J. F. Johnson were awarded 30 year pins for serving on the first board of management and first Y-members respectively.

Special recognition was presented to Michael Gilmore. He received the Youth Christian Character Award for outstanding contributions in the youth programs.

Other recognitions accorded were Lady of the Year to Mrs. Carrie Gilmer and Laymen of the year to Jimmie Cunningham and S. C. Smith. Hal Sieber, public relations director for the Chamber of Commerce, and Allan Wanamaker, past president of the Chamber, received Citizenship and Service to Youth awards.

H. E. Webb, was cited for his contributions in fund-raising and over-all programs of the Y.M.C.A. D. W. Morehead, Executive Director made the presentations.
