Cotton Farmers Wrestle With Planting Decision

North Carolina farmers are wrestling with the decision of how much cotton to plant this year. Three straight bad-weather years and some changes in the cotton program have to be weighed in the decision.

The 1969 program features these important elements, as described by Jim Allgood, extension farm management economist at North Carolina State University:

—There will be no diversion payments

—The present loan rate is maintained

—The price support payment is increased.

"Farmers have a wider choice on the amount of cotton they can produce in 1969," Allgood pointed out. "It's anyone's guess just what size crop we will have. The important thing for the farmer is that he evaluate all alternatives before planting time."

Allotments will be the same

Pesticides in Cigarettes May Harm, Study Says

GREENSBORO, N. C.—Three research grants, totaling more than $35,000, were approved this week for staff members at North Carolina A&T State University.

Largest of the grants was for $27,717 from the Council for Tobacco Research, USA, to Dr. H. M. Chopra, professor of chemistry.

Dr. Chopra is investigating the possible health hazards that may result from the pesticides that remain on the tobacco leaves used in making cigarettes.

"We know that all of the pesticides that are used to protect the tobacco leaves during growth are strong poisons," said Dr. Chopra. "We are going to try to determine what happens to these pesticides that remain in the cigarette."

Dr. Chopra said his study will try to find out if the products given off from pesticides burned in a cigarette are given off in large enough dosages to be harmful to the individual smoker's health.

A grant of $6,320 from the Greensboro City Schools has been approved for Dr. Arthur F. Jackson, dean of A&T's School of Arts and Sciences and Dr. LaMyra Davis, associate director of the Institute for Research in Human Resources.

Jackson and Dr. Davis will evaluate the school system's projects and activities, which are being conducted under Title I of the 1965 Elementary and Secondary School Act.

Mrs. Mildred Bonner, professor of psychology, has received
