Mrs. Willie Mae Staples Named Field Clerical Supervisor for North Carolina Mutual Insurance Co.

When the opening for a Field Clerical Supervisor for N. C. Mutual became available the name of Mrs. Willie Mae Staples loomed large immediately, because of her qualifications. Mrs. Staples has for a long time been regarded as one of the most efficient cashiers in the company's system; she is loyal and dedicated.

Mrs. Staples joined North Carolina Mutual in July 1951. She is a native of Guilford College and a graduate of Dudley High School at Greensboro, N. C. Following high school she studied at the Cortez Peters Business College in Washington, D. C.

and later attended Howard University. She was married to the late William Staples of Greensboro and has one son.

When she attended the company's 1960 school for Field Clerical Personnel it was stated that, "she brought her notebook full of questions and carried it back full of information." Mrs. Staples has certainly applied well the knowledge she has gained through training and experience. We consider her a valuable addition to our Field Clerical Staff and wish for Mrs. Staples continued growth and success.

NEW AFRICA GIRDS FOR CONTINUED EFFORT

DETROIT In an executive order declaring a State of Emergency "in those territories (in the U.S.) where the Republic is presently operative," Brother Gaidi (Attorney Milton R. Henry), First Vice President and chief executive officer for the Republic of New Africa in America, Thursday named four new regional vice presidents. He said he acted to meet "the possibility of certain future developments interfering with the expeditious conduct of the affairs of Government."

The Executive Order followed by five days a savage attack by Detroit police upon New African officials and citizens attending a mass meeting Saturday, March 29, at New Bethel Baptist Church. The meeting was a public highlight of the second national convention of New Africa's congress, the National Council of Representatives. The convention was being held on the first anniversary of the founding of this "nation in captivity" which seeks to liberate five states of the South (Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina), making an independent nation, and winning a reparations settlement from the U. S. of no less than 200 billion dollars.

In the unprovoked police attack, which miraculously resulted in no deaths to New Africans or their guests, although several were shot and many injured, including the wife of Minister of Culture Baba Oseriem Adefunmi, who had her ankle broken, more than 800 rounds were fired by police — without warning — through the glass-doored front of the church and inside during a wild rampage.

Brother Gaidi, in declaring the Emergency and taking follow-up steps, vowed that the

Teaching of Nonregional American English

The teaching of a nonregional American English dialect to the disadvantaged child offers the promise of integration at the national level, according to Dr. Joey L. Dillard, visiting lecturer in the language and behavior programs of Yeshiva University's Ferkauf Graduate School of Humanities and Social Sciences.

Writing in the spring issue of Florida Foreign Language Reporter, devoted to an anthology of articles on the educational problems of the disadvantaged, Dr. Dillard says, "Clearly, the Negro does not have all the image problems that are often attributed to him—at least in language. And even more clearly, he does not aspire to sound like 'Mr. Charlie.'"

According to Dr. Dillard, former director of the Urban Language Study in Washington, D. C., the Consensus Standard dialect of American English would be most useful for the teaching of the disadvantaged. "The dialect," he said, "is unmarked by regional characteristics. One might call it a Huntley-Brinkley dialect, a dialect aspiring announcers would seek to emulate."

Dr. Dillard cited a recent study by McGill University's Professors Lambert and Tucker of Tougaloo College freshman, in which students at the Mississippi Negro school had an overwhelming preference for the Consensus Standard dialect.

Educated Southern white speech received the lowest rating, even lower than uneducated Negro speech.

"The only foreseeable difficulty," Dr. Dillard said, "in teaching the Consensus Standard is that teachers who have not mastered the dialect may not be in adequate supply. There are, however, other strategies, especially involving the use of recorded models of the type which might be found to be acceptable for imitation by the disadvantaged population."

While Dr. Dillard calls for the use of the Consensus Standard dialect, he has expressed the view, still held, that the disadvantaged child should have the option of learning to read in either "black" or "standard" English.

A native of Dallas, Texas, he was Fulbright professor during 1967-68 at Universite' Officielle de Bujumbura, Burundi. He served for five years as associate professor with the University of Puerto Rico and research associate with the Institute of Caribbean Studies.

The Florida Foreign Language Reporter edited by Alfred C. Aarons, is published semiannually in North Miami Beach in cooperation with the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages, and the Modern Language Association of America.
