A&T Plans Acceleration of Engineering Studies

Dr. Reginald Amory, dean of the recently accredited School of Engineering at A&T State University, said the school plans to step up its research and service to business and industry in the Piedmont Crescent.

A&T officials were notified Wednesday that the Engineers' Council for Professional Development (ECPD) has approved programs in architectural, mechanical and electrical engineering. ECPD is the highest accreditation agency in the nation for engineering education.

"At the present time," said Amory, our School of Engineering is endeavoring to increase the amount of research being conducted."

Amory said projects are already underway that deal with the memory core in digital systems, the using of metallic oxides as semi-conductors.

"The A&T School of Engineering has excellent facilities for conducting research in metal forming processes, urban planning and development, soil mechanics, structural dynamics and in several other areas," Amory added.

The School recently acquired the University's Graham Building. Amory said this will add approximately 70 per cent more space for engineering classes and research.

By winning accreditation, A&T joins Duke University and the

NIXON TAPS A&T PROFESSOR TO CHAIR PANEL AT CONFAB

Dr. Cecile H. Edwards, chairman of the Department of Home Economics at A&T State University, has been appointed by President Nixon to chair a panel at the forthcoming White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health.

The conference, which will focus on hunger and malnutrition among the poor in the United States, will be held in Washington, D. C. Dec. 2-4.

Recommendations from the White House Conference will serve as a basis for a National Nutrition Policy. Twenty-six panels will meet prior to the conference to prepare these recommendations. In December, more than 2500 of the nation's leading food and nutrition experts and other Americans will attend. Educators, medical and health specialists, scientists, and representatives of agriculture and the food industry, and spokesmen for consumer and social action groups will participate with federal, state and local government officials at the three-day meeting.

Dr. Jean Mayer, Harvard Professor of Nutrition and Research, and Special Consultant to President Nixon, will organize and direct the conference.

The first national conference on nutrition since 1941 and the first White House Conference of the Nixon Administration will

NEW ELECTRICAL SYSTEM CALLED "TAX EVASION SCHEME" BY DUKE POWER VICE-PRESIDENT

Charlotte — "A tax evasion scheme that in 15 years will cost the taxpayers over three hundred million dollars."

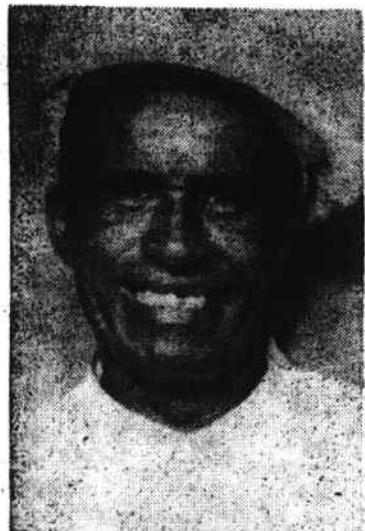

That was the charge leveled today by Duke Power Vice President J. P. Lucas, Jr. at the massive statewide generating and transmission system being proposed by the state's municipal and co-op electric systems.

The state's cities which are in the power business and the electric cooperatives recently announced a plan whereby the cities would build large generating plants and the co-ops would build over 7,000 miles of transmission lines. Backers of the plan said that the work would begin in 1975 and be completed in 1990 at an estimated cost of $1.75 billion.

Lucas noted that the $1.75 billion was in terms of present
