"Some people have wondered if our defense is as good as last season," he added. "I don't think the defense is down, in fact, we have actually given up fewer points than last year. If we get our pass rush together, we will really be ready."

Westmoreland also noted that the Aggie defense has come up with more interceptions the first three games than last year.

He attributes much of the success of the defensive secondary to Mel Groomes, A&T's defensive coach. We try to work as a unit, said Westmoreland, "and we always go with the attitude that we are going to get the ball back for the offense."

Right now Westmoreland has a busy week trying to get ready for the Aggies' Homecoming game against Maryland State on Saturday.

He recalled that A&T has not beaten the Hawks since 1963. "We would sure like to win this game," said Westmoreland. "I think that it would boost our morale for the rest of the season. We also would like to win it for our seniors who have never beaten this team."

"I had a real good Homecoming game against Morgan last year," he added. "I just hope I can repeat it this time."
